that have no clue."
"I get a little disturbed when they get a little personal with the players," Doherty said of critics in the public domain. "These players are doing the best they can. They're not trying to lose games; they're not trying to miss shots. They're college athletes. They're young kids. Sometimes we lose perspective of that."
Boone gave no public indication during the season that he was unhappy and remained positive despite suffering through the worst season in UNC history. "It's probably a product of everybody being committed to the team," Boone said before the ACC Tournament. "We just have 14 or 15 guys that are all committed to the team. You don't always have that, and it's a special thing to be a part of."

Payne also said that students who search the database with a roommate preference were only directed to rooms with two vacancies so that all roommate preferences could be accommodated.
Payne said that the limited space remaining after recontracting does not include spaces reserved for incoming freshmen in each residence hall.

classes, where unchanged versions of books are used year after year, will benefit from a rental program. But introductory level textbooks are usually revised every two years, making a rental program more difficult, he said.
Many texts are sold with workbooks, study guides and software, which are harder to rent, he said. "Textbook rental

Bradley said that students seem generally pleased with the recontracting procedures. "The amount of people who have successfully recontracted would indicate that a great majority of the student population is satisfied with the process," he said.
But some students said they were left with few housing options. Freshman Patrick Peterson said that he was not able to find a room out of South Campus but that he was able to secure his current room for another year. "I'm a little bitter, but I'll get over it," Peterson said. "A lot of my isn't going to fit for all types of classes." O'Brien said the committee will need to work closely with faculty members because their support will be necessary to implement a rental program.

He said the committee also must take into consideration the potential revenue loss for Student Stores because part of the proceeds from textbook sales goes to academic scholarships.
The committee will report its findings to full Congress by Oct. 30.
Congress members also unanimously passed a resolution to commend the BOT for rejecting a system of night parking permits at the group's March 28 meeting.
The commendation will be sent to the BOT, to members of the Transportation and Parking Advisory friends tried to stay on South Campus." But sophomore Max Dayvault, who has lived in Morrison Residence Hall for two years, said he was upset when no rooms outside of South Campus were available. "The only rooms available were in the dorm I'm already in," Dayvault said. "I'm kind of pissed off. You would think as a rising junior I would have some priority."
