students; serves as a research partner with faculty and students; and strives to meet the legal information needs of UNC-Chapel Hill students and faculty, the legal community, and the citizens of North Carolina.

Collections:

The Law Library collection includes basic Anglo-American legal materials; treatises, digests, encyclopedias, citations, and looseleaf services; records and briefs for the North Carolina courts, the Fourth Court of Appeals, and the United States Supreme Court; and selected Federal government documents. The collection has special strengths in banking law and civil rights.

Borrowing: UNC-Chapel Hill faculty, students, and staff use their valid UNC One Cards. Others may apply for borrowing privileges at the Circulation Desk.

Reference: The staff at the Reference Desk helps patrons with legal research and with questions about the collection but does not give legal advice. Email questions to Law Reference@unc.edu-

Tours and Instruction: Contact the head of Research and User Services at 962-1605. These sessions can be tailored to a particular class.

Web Site:

The Law Library Web site (library.law.unc.edu) provides information about hours, policies, and services, as well as links to judicial opinions, statutes, regulations, and other major legal resources from North Carolina, the Federal government, and the international community.

The Law Library newsletter, LLUNC-CH Times, available through the Web site, provides information about developing services and legal research techniques.

Branch Libraries: Hidden Treasures

In addition to the collections found in Davis, House Undergraduate, and Wilson libraries, the Academic Affairs Library system includes many collections that focus on special subject areas. These departmental libraries are scattered around the campus in or near the academic departments they serve. For example, the Music Library is in Hill Hall, and the Chapin Planning Library is in New East. While the collections in departmental libraries emphasize specific disciplines, the libraries are all part of the UNC-Chapel Hill Library System and are open to the public. Your UNC One Card or Library Borrowers Card entitles you to borrow materials from any of them. The back page of this publication lists campus libraries and provides a map of locations.
