culminate as the year takes shape. For one, a task force on appointment, promotion and tenure is expected to submit a report sometime this semester, which should outline potential revisions to tenure guidelines. The council also will debate a number of system overhauls that have been long in the making — one to the General College curriculum and the other to the Honor Court. "I definitely want to see the Honor Court reforms discussed, changed and implemented," Estroff said. "I realized there was such large faculty dissatisfaction with the process." The past has shown, however, that some of the University's most contested items of discussion have surfaced unexpectedly, Estroff said. Last year, a heavily divided campus prompted the council to support UNC's proposed establishment of a satellite campus in the Middle Eastern city of Doha, Qatar. Similarly, the Executive Committee of the council found itself taking quick action to endorse academic freedom after the University's summer reading choice came under fire this year. "Who do you get sidelined," Estroff said. "Who knew Qatar would come up? Who knew the Quran would come up?" What will keep her grounded during her last year leading UNC's faculty is teaching, Estroff said. "It saves me. This is going to sound sort of drippy, but every semester when I meet my students, it reminds me of why I'm here." Taking all that lies ahead into consideration, Estroff said, it will be difficult for her to embody all of the faculty's diverse values and ideals. "I don't think any one person could do that," she said. "I hope I do reflect some of their best and minimize some of their worst." It's also important to realize that whatever stances the faculty take, students will be involved in the process, Estroff said. "They need to understand that shared governance is tripartite," she said. "The good news is, we're on the same side — unless it's grades or money." stitution states that individual student governments are to send four voting delegates to the association. One must be the student body president, one must be the officer for the school's legislative body, and the remaining two slots can be filled at the university's discretion. But the UNC-CH Student Code has more specific guidelines. Title IV, Article

III, Section 239 of the Student Code states that Daum, as student body president, shall serve as a voting delegate on the ASG and that she must appoint two other delegates — one a graduate student, the other an undergraduate — who must be approved by the Student Affairs Committee and Student Congress. Title II, Article XII, Section 428 also states that the speaker of Congress is supposed to be the fourth voting delegate but that the speaker can appoint someone to take his place at any time.

Hiller said the ordeal brings up a broader issue — the need to search for any further inconsistencies in the Student Code. "It's going to take three or four people who know the code really well," he said. "We'll sit down and address these things... It's not an immediate concern." All appointments go before the Student Affairs Committee tonight and the full Student Congress on Sept. 3. The University Editor can be reached at udesk@unc.edu.

BOWLES

"I want to make sure we have strong national economic policies," Bowles said. "And that means putting people back to work. It's a tough job market out there." He also cited improving public education at all levels, revamping the national healthcare system and protecting the environment as top priorities. When pressed by an audience member during a cordial question-and-answer session, Bowles said he would support President Bush in a military initiative against Iraq given that Bush was willing to make his case to U.S. citizens. "I believe that, at the end of the day, the president will be able to make his case," he said. "This Saddam Hussein is a bad guy." Margaret Teich, an undeclared freshman, said that she found Bowles' speech charming but that she thinks the election will come down to more than folksy campaigning. "I liked his down-home approach," Teich said. "But I think it will be a difficult primary for him." The State & National Editor can be reached at stntdesk@unc.edu.

The play say it was picked for its depiction of a community healing after a tragedy. "Everybody in America had a very difficult fall of 2001, and ... because of our proximity to the Pentagon ... [we] were very hard hit," said Linda Coleman, a UM-College Park professor who served on the selection committee. Coleman added that she anticipated possible controversy but hoped that the variety of perspectives presented in the play would quell people's fears. VOTE

Moeser said he expects more students will turn out because the location is so close, especially for students who do not have cars. "There is no reason not to vote when it's this convenient," he said. The voting center will be open from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. weekdays between now and Sept. 10. Anyone in line at 5 p.m. on Sept. 10 will be allowed to vote. Moeser said he hopes students are not the only ones to use the facility. "I hope all faculty, staff and students all take advantage of this," he said. Overcash said he thinks students will be more likely to vote at a polling place on campus because they are familiar with the area. He said that many students often do not know where to go to vote on Election Day and that even if they know the location of the polling site, they might not be familiar enough with the area to know how to get there. He said, "If students actually go out and vote, we can start being taken seriously in Orange County." The University Editor can be reached at udesk@unc.edu.
