er education.
Because of the new Republican majority, the House could have new chairmen positions in all its committees when the legislature reconvenes in January. The influential Senate Appropriations Committee also will have all new chairmen because the senators holding the positions either retired or were voted out of office.

Rep. Art Pope, R-Wake, who chose not to seek re-election, said the new chairmen in both chambers will allow for new ideas both in funding higher education and in balancing the entire state budget.

Pope led several Republican efforts during the last session to withhold a percentage of the UNC system's overhead receipts - a total of $126 million systemwide - to fund other areas of state government.

In general, Republicans are interested in oversight of cost control, said Jonathan Jordan, communications director for the N.C. Republican Party. He said overhead receipts and summer reading programs - such as UNC's controversial reading of "Approaching the Qur'an" - are two areas that will receive scrutiny. But Democrats said they worry a Republican majority in the House will lead to drastic cuts in higher education.

"I hope they will think twice about disrupting the University system," said Barbara Allen, chairwoman for the N.C. Democratic Party. "Even if we're outnumbered, we're still going to fight for education."

Allen said she is particularly concerned about budget cuts because of the recent boom in enrollment at system campuses across the state and the need to maintain accessibility.

University officials also expressed concern that they likely will not receive the funding necessary to educate a growing number of students.

"It will be impossible to fund all of our priorities," said J.B. Milliken, UNC-system vice president for public affairs. "We will continue to make the case for an increase in enrollment funding."

Though much past support for enrollment growth and other key university funding has come from Democrats, Guillory said the UNC system has many Republican friends both in the legislature and in constituencies.

He said, "The college-educated sector of the electorate votes more heavily for the Republicans."

FALL FORUM

Shah said that the largest issue of concern for students is tuition but that because Congress can not directly affect tuition decisions, the issue will not be addressed at the forum.

In addition to the three key issues, textbook rental, book buybacks and the lowering of textbook prices also will be a topic of focus during the forum, Shah said.

Congress members say understanding the concerns of the student body is essential to running an effective government.

nomination for speaker pro tem, defeating Rep. Michael Decker, R-Forsyth.

The speaker of the House and the speaker pro tem must be elected by the entire House, while party leaders - majority leader and majority whip - only need approval from the caucus.

Rep. Joe Kiser, R-Catawba, who ran unopposed, was elected majority leader. Rep. Trudi Walend, R-Buncombe, defeated Rep. Mitchell Gillespie, R-

"At this point we have 30 members representing a student population of over 20,000," said Congress Speaker Tony Larson.

"There is no way that the 30 of us can know of all the problems facing students. So any time students can come in and give us feedback is important - there's always a need for that."

A proposal for the forum was brought to Congress by representative and Student Affairs Committee Chairwoman Carey Richter, and representatives Margaret Thomas and Shah organized the event.

Athlete Reinstatement.

"We believe we made a strong case that even though they participated in the event, the tournament was so informal it did not meet the definition of outside competition," said UNC Director of Athletics Dick Baddour. "Jon and Will certainly did not intend to break an NCAA rule; they were acting as good citizens and spirited members of the student body by helping those less fortunate than themselves. I appreciate the NCAA staff's and committee's work in this process."

"I am happy for Jon and Will," said UNC coach Matt Doherty. "They are our captains and have worked so hard preparing for the start of their senior seasons. They would have been missed Monday. We already had the youngest team in school history. I commend the NCAA for looking at their situation on an individual basis. Jon and Will are great examples of what NCAA student-athletes are all about."

The Tar Heels open play at 7 p.m. today against Penn State in the Smith Center in the first round of the Preseason NIT.

But it was perhaps the performers' parents who were most excited to see the mix of traditional and modern values that characterized Sangam Nite, Parikh said. "(The show) conveys a message: We are keeping South Asian culture alive," he said. "It's a great benefit for parents to see their child keep the culture alive."
