"We take it on a game-by-game situation," Gwaltney said. "If we deem it necessary, we can decide at that point and time, but at this point I don't foresee it happening."

Two years ago officials had a large number of tickets left over after the FSU distribution. Gwaltney said that between 500 and 600 tickets were not picked up for last year's FSU game.

McMillan said the CAA supports the decision. Eliminating ticket distribution also will prevent students from giving tickets to opposing fans — a problem at last year's game against N.C. State.

About half the fans at that game supported UNC's rival team, McMillan said. Officials said they do not expect the change to prevent students from seeing the game.

Some students said they are not worried about being shut out of the game because of high demand. Senior Katie Vick said she had not yet heard of the change in this year's procedure.

"I don't even know if I'm going (to Saturday's game), but if I am I'll just show up at a normal time," she said.

Still, McMillan urged students to arrive early if they want a spot at Kenan Stadium this weekend. He said students probably should be in their seats by about 7:30 p.m.

He said the CAA has been publicizing the change to ensure that students prepare accordingly.

Saturday's game admission process was explained in a press release posted on the CAA Web site.

In the press release, Gwaltney said the stadium will open two hours before the game starts. "The earlier students get there, the better the seats they'll get and the more excitement they can generate," he stated.

Considering last year's difficult football season, McMillan said, he hopes students will support the team and enjoy the exciting environment.

sions, Fleming said.

Lobbying by UNC-system representatives both during and between sessions has had a positive impact on the system and its campuses, Fulk said, adding that this showed when lawmakers worked to manage the state's budget deficit.

"Education was the ... lowest cut of the entire budget."

Harris, director of Career Services. Harris said the move to South Campus is not in the best interest of her department.

"It's not an improvement," she said. "I'm concerned that the location will not be conducive for many of the students we serve."

Career Services is one of about a dozen departments selected by a committee of students, faculty and staff to fill the proposed Student and Academic Services Building.

Other departments slated to move include the Cashier's Office, the Office of the University Registrar and the Carolina Center for Public Service, said Steve Allred, associate provost for academic affairs and a member of the committee.

Allred said the committee selected departments with a student affairs function for relocation in order to cater to students living on South Campus.

"The concept of the building is to create space where lots of services can go," Allred said. "It brings amenities from North Campus to South Campus."

The selections, Allred said, were finalized last spring.

But Provost Robert Shelton said the University still is in negotia-of 105 degrees. Forecasts placed Wednesday's high at 96 degrees.

The heat index is derived from a combination of the temperature and the dew point, which measures moisture in the air.

Humble said he expects rain and cooler temperatures in the next few days. "We are expecting a widespread relief by at least Monday in the Triangle," he said.

Experts are advising people to limit outdoor activities, especially in late afternoon. People should take frequent breaks when outdoors, wear lightweight, loose-fitting clothing and drink plenty of fluids.

"If you wait until you're thirsty to drink, you've waited too long," said Nick Waters, director of the Orange County Department of Emergency Management Services.

Mary Covington, medical director of UNC's Student Health Service, said if people feel disoriented, dizzy or clammy they should see a doctor.

In the central United States, temperatures have surpassed 100 degrees, resulting in the deaths of two elderly Missouri residents late last week, according to The Associated Press.

In an average year, 175 Americans die from extreme heat, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Web site.

But the University has yet to encounter any heat-related problems, Covington said.

She said that because of the heat, a CDC article about heat-related illnesses will be posted this Friday on SHS' Web site to advise students how to stay cool.
