For her part, Chalupny said, she was much more satisfied with the team's dominant performances than with her own.

"Honestly, it's all kind of an afterthought," she said. "We've had four great wins, and that's the main thing."

With six goals and one assist in four games, Chalupny has emerged as a force in the Tar Heel offense.

"She's my play-making midfielder," Dorrance said. "She's like a field general."

And Chalupny's impact will only increase as she improves.

"Playing with these great teammates every day at practice," she said, "you're bound to get better every time you step on the field."

out of her shadow, but (Maxwell) definitely started off on the right foot."

With Maxwell in the middle, the Tar Heel defense blocked any attempts at offense. Friday, they held No. 24 Kentucky to three shots, and Sunday, they allowed only two shots against No. 14 Nebraska.

The North Carolina offense, for its part, took 56 shots in the two games.

"This weekend we just became more of a cohesive unit," Watley said. "What stuck out to me was how we were able to shut down their offense."

Watley played on the left side of the trio of defenders that included herself, Maxwell and Sara Randolph.

The play of Maxwell should earn her a solid role for the future on the defensive line.

"I guess it's kind of a bad place to be," Maxwell said about being in the shadow of Reddick. "But she's just awesome, and it's just awesome to be able to train and play with her."

Nevertheless, at the middle defender position, Maxwell was able to move between an offensive and defensive role.

"I've been bounced around over the past week," Maxwell said. "But this week has been good for me and the defense because we've used this time to get used to each other."

And no one can say she doesn't have role models for her game.

"(Reddick) is just one of those people," Maxwell said. "And for a freshman, she's great to look up to."
