"It just seems that so many towns have a Martin Luther King Boulevard," Greene said. "I'd like to see something more creative and original."

Renaming the road in memory of the slain civil rights leader should be the candidates first and foremost concern in regard to the minority community, said Bill Thorpe, the chapter's political chairman. "We are one of the few cities who don't have a boulevard (in King's name) — not a little street going nowhere," Thorpe said. Mediator Eugene Farrar, the chapter's treasurer, asked candidates how the town might attract businesses that address the needs of minority residents. Incumbent Bill Strom said that more attention should be focused on the current businesses in the area, while other candidates stressed the need for the development of downtown and aid for minority-owned businesses. "We need to look at state and federal money to fund the start up of minority businesses," candidate Dianne Bachman said. The NAACP does not endorse election candidates.

install the cameras, ACS collects $48 out of every $50 fine for violations if there are less than 1,750 issued per month. The town receives the remaining $2. Incumbent Jim Ward also supported the cameras and said he will continue to do so until he finds evidence they don't work. "I voted feeling like it had a reasonable chance of being a safety advantage." But if a newly elected council chose to remove the cameras, it could do so without incurring monetary repercussions. Ernie Rogers, an engineer and technician for Chapel Hill, said the town has the contractual right to repeal the program. Rogers said removing the cameras would not cost the town any money because ACS paid for their installation. For his part, Raymond said he will continue to urge candidates to oppose the contract. "I think (the red light camera system) is now an established issue for the election."

casing children's activities at Oak Ranch. Saulsby said the institution pinpoints issues and deals with them quickly and effectively. "Oak Ranch has closed the gap between what we know and what we do." Richmond said all child residents on the ranch have been screened to ensure they will be compatible with the program. "There are six current residents, but we have programs supporting families outside of the ranch as well," he said. "Oak Ranch is not an orphanage. It is meant to rebuild dysfunctional families through support and guidance." He added that he is eager to see the 755-acre plot outside Sanford, which represents 27 counties, develop into something larger and more influential. ern and northwestern states. "We have issued in North Carolina 3,713 business loan applications and 12,942 home loan applications," he said. Adinolfi said that in these situations, there is aid available for most who request it. More funds likely will be added to the $40 million, North said. He said $18 million of the $40 million is being used for individual assistance, going toward expenses such as home repairs, temporary housing and business damages. Other portions of the aid are being used for specific missions such as obtaining water and electricity for damaged areas.

SPRINKLERS

Because the Rhode Island tragedy occurred eight months ago, council member Dorothy Verkerk said, time served as a good qualifier in revising the sprinkler ordinance.

One area that will receive funding is the coastal highway, N.C. 12, said Ashley Memory, spokeswoman for the N.C. Department of Transportation. "We have a repair plan in place," she said of a proposal that will fill in an inlet created in the highway by the hurricane that stranded residents of Hatteras Island," she said. "This is intended as an emergency short term repair." These repairs will cost $3 million to $5 million and will be a precursor to more extensive repairs in the future, Memory said. "It's for the residents who live there as well as for the tourists who come down to the Outer Banks."
