

Teens paint mural for hangout

BY KATHRYN REED
STAFF WRITER

Under the guidance of a University senior, a group of area teens are spending their spring break creating a mural for their Carrboro after-school hangout.

The yet-to-be-named teen center, which opened in January at 110 W. Main St., is the result of a collaboration between Pa'lante and Youth Creating Change, area youth programs that serve Latino and black teens, respectively.

The artists hope the mural will brighten the center's narrow hallway with its large picture of Earth surrounded by the flags of Guatemala, El Salvador, Mexico and the United States.

The design began to come together Tuesday afternoon as a group of eight Latino teens discussed ideas, traced patterns and took turns painting the mural's bright yellow backdrop — all while chatting and joking with each other.

Susannah Miller, a UNC senior art and psychology major, oversees the creative chaos.

"It's fun," she said. "It's kind of hard at first because I don't speak Spanish."

Miller said she took on the project for class credit.

It is expected to be complete by Friday, she said.

One of the teens who helps translate for some of the painters, 15-year-old Ezequiel Hernandez, an eighth-grader at Smith Middle School, said he developed the original ideas for the mural.

"I saw a picture on the Internet of the world," he said. "And the flags are because everybody's from different countries."

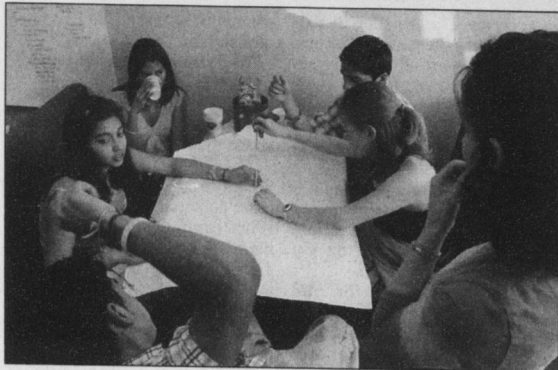

Artist Yanina Chicas, 15, a freshman at Chapel Hill High School, said she is excited about helping with the project.

"I think it will be fun and make a change on the walls," she said. "It can express what we think of here."

Chicas said she sees the center as a positive force in the lives of many teens.

"It makes the teenagers do something that is not bad, but also you're having some fun," she said.

Artist and Chapel Hill High sophomore Gamaliel Torija, 16, said the center gives him an opportunity to meet new people and participate in educational field trips.

"It's not boring," he said.

Providing a variety of activities for teens is one of the goals Pa'lante and Youth Creating Change share, said Laura Wenzel, director of Pa'lante and co-director of the teen center.

"We both feel teenagers need to be given responsibility, and that's how they learn," she said.

But while the groups have conducted some joint programming in the past — including a teen mixer last May — the establishment of a mutual teen center has been an adjustment, Wenzel said.

"It's been kind of a big move," Wenzel said.

She said the two groups plan to decide on a name for the center by Thursday and hire a program director in May, which will help bring both Latino and black teens to the center.

Chicas said she thinks the joint center will ultimately improve relations between black and Latino teenagers.

"I think it was a good idea because African-Americans and Spanish-speaking people can help each other," she said. "We can teach them Spanish. They can learn our culture, and we can learn theirs."

Bill would halt local annexation

BY AMY EAGLEBURGER
STAFF WRITER

A bill sponsored by state legislators from the area could put a hold on Carrboro's hotly debated annexation of two areas of subdivisions.

The bill — to be introduced today on the House floor by Reps. Bill Faison, D-Orange, Larry Brown, R-Forsyth, and Nelson Dollar, R-Wake — calls for a suspension of involuntary annexation by municipalities while a committee reviews current annexation procedures.

The suspension would halt involuntary annexations that have been approved but not yet put into effect, a description that fits the state of Carrboro's action. The town's Board of Aldermen approved in January the annexation of Areas A and B, consisting of six neighborhoods and more than 850 residents.

Area A includes the Camden, Highlands, Highland Meadows and Highlands North neighborhoods, while Area B is the northern portion of Rogers Road and the Fox Meadow and Meadow Run subdivisions.

Residents of the annexed areas said Carrboro abused its power when it pushed for the annexation, and Faison said he considered the situation when sponsoring the bill.

"People went to Carrboro and said they didn't want to be annexed by anybody," he said. "Nobody on the Carrboro board listened to them."

The action could not be reversed permanently until the committee formed to review the laws gives its final recommendation.

Other bills have been proposed that set forth specific changes in the existing legal procedures. This bill is different in that it calls for no concrete changes but offers a way to find the best solution.

"What I want to do is just suspend things and allow a committee to review the laws and make the laws more equitable," Brown said.

Legislators hope the study will address the more frequent use of involuntary annexation by cities.

"In the past, involuntary annexation was rarely used and only in case of manifest public necessity," Dollar said. "Now we are seeing involuntary annexation being used in a far more aggressive manner."

Newly incorporated residents might face changes such as the doubling of property taxes and the costs of being connected to municipal sewer and water systems. Residents in areas to be annexed have little say in the matter, an issue that is at the heart of the bill.

"They really have no voice in the process if a city wishes to annex property," Dollar said.

Naysayers of the bill say this type of annexation is not arbitrary and is beneficial to cities. "It allows (municipalities) the ability to grow under strict rules that are set forth by the legislature," said Andy Romanet, general counsel to the N.C. League of Municipalities.

These requirements consider continuity and urbanization of the area to be annexed and mandate that the city provide the same services in all areas.

The bill's sponsors will see staunch opposition from the NCLM, Romanet said. "We will fight this piece of legislation."

Delay causes snag in assault case

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The case on a man charged in 2003 with assault with a deadly weapon on a government official was delayed Tuesday in Orange County Superior Court because of unforeseen circumstances.

Demetrius Alston, 28 at the time of his arrest, is facing six charges including assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, resisting a public officer, eluding arrest and driving with a revoked license.

Alston was issued the assault on a government official charge after a November 2003 incident in which he backed his car into a police officer while he was being approached with outstanding warrants.

Alston's attorney, Douglas Simeon, was unable to appear in court with his client Tuesday because he now is servicing a term of active duty in Iraq with the Army Reserves.

District Attorney James R. Woodall Jr. said he tried to contact Simeon's office over the last two weeks but could not reach him.

Superior Court Judge Wade Barber delayed the case until April 26, when it is anticipated that Simeon will be able to appear with his client.

Making a private gift to Carolina is something most people think only happens after graduation. But a few special students recognized the importance of giving back what they can now. In doing so, they've become part of the Heelraisers Society.

The Carolina First Campaign and the Office of University Development would like to thank the following students for their personal contribution to Carolina. Their combined support has made a tremendous impact on the quality of everyone's experience here at UNC-Chapel Hill.

THANK YOU HEELRAISERS!
