Arts group promotes campus arts treasure

Ackland extends hours, programs

BY JACKY BRAMMER

You don't have to be an arts major to experience art at the University.

Students have access to valuable resources on campus such as the Ackland Art Museum.

And beginning in fall 2004, undergraduates gained a voice in the museum's affairs with the formation of Student Friends of the Ackland, an interest group that increases awareness for the museum and its services.

The group is entirely stu-dent-run, said Amanda Hughes, director of special projects at the Ackland.

"It is a marvelous organization that gets undergraduate students involved in the ongoing business of the museum," she said

The group wants to change the perception that the Ackland — or art in general — is for only scholastic purposes.

"A lot of students experience the Ackland as part of a class assignment," said Maria Bleier, the Ackland's director of communica-

But really the desire with Student Friends is to get students to see the Ackland as their resource and as their art museum."

To help increase student familiarity with the museum, the Student Friends of the Ackland helps spearhead fundraising projects and makes the street chalk murals at the annual Apple Chill festival.

The group's aim is "to create events for students that are along three different seams: professional opportunities, social events and cultural events," Bleier said.

The relationship between the Student Friends of the Ackland and the museum has brought additional benefits.

"Student Friends have helped the Ackland staff be more responsive to the needs of students, Hughes said.

One of Student Friends' most recent accomplishments in the area of outreach is getting the Ackland to expand operating hours to include nights.

The museum recently announced its "Art After Dark" program, during which patrons can access galleries until 9 p.m. on the second Friday of every month.

Even though the group started only last year, it already has about 100 members and has seen tangible success.

"The first year we had just introduced it in the fall, and time was spent introducing it," Bleier

"This year we have the students in place, and we're more orga-

Towns go green with projects

County and city officials want to give their constituents a breath of fresh air.

To meet that end, Chapel Hill, Carrboro and Orange County have engaged in a program to study greenhouse gas emissions in the area.

The Orange County Board of Commissioners met Monday to discuss the issue and review the memorandum of agreement already approved by Chapel Hill and Carrboro town governments.

"I think all three communities consider themselves to be very pro-gressive-minded in terms of environmental awareness," Environment and Resource Conservation Director David Stancil said in an interview Wednesday.

The three governments are members of the International Council of Local Environmental Initiatives a group of local governments from around the world committed to sustainable development.

They made the commitment to engage in the project at an Assembly of Governments meeting in September and now will be looking to hire a Toronto-based firm to aid them in this pursuit.

The ICLEI Energy Services, in

"Our goal ultimately is to now have (the Community Carbon Reduction Project) spread across the country."

DOUGLAS CRAWFORD-BROWN, DIRECTOR, CCR PROJECT

cooperation with town and county staff, will take inventory on cur-rent emissions levels and draft an action plan to reduce greenhouse

"In the end, I think we felt like IES of Toronto had better experience doing this," Stancil said of why the consultant was hired.

The company specializes in helping municipalities review their facilities. Its work has been seen in places such as Chicago and Toronto, and with the company's help, local officials hope to see the project underway soon.

The total expected cost is about $45,000, with the county picking up $13,000 to $14,000. The municipalities also hope to get grant money.

Noting that Orange County has been established as a nonattainment zone by the Environmental Protection Agency, commissioner Stephen Halkiotis said Wednesday that it's important to get on this initiative as soon as possible.

Halkiotis expressed interest in another air-quality improvement program that Chapel Hill and the University are just beginning.
The town of Chapel Hill could be the first in the country to join the Community Carbon Reduction Project, a British group that hopes to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 60 percent by 2025.

Program Director Douglas

Crawford-Brown said they will soon be making a formal pledge with the town to reduce pollution.

He noted that initially the group will work only with town staff to reduce emissions from municipal buildings. The hope from there is for the town government to set an example and get others involved.

"Our goal ultimately is to now have it spread across the country," he said. "We're starting with Chapel Hill."
