

TERRY

versatile and so long and so big." Terry scored the Tar Heels' first two points of the game, avoiding a shot-clock violation by banking the ball off the glass with "03" above the basket in red numbers. UNC missed its next six shots but when the junior drew a blocking foul on his next drive to the basket, he sank both attempts. Few of his points were spectacular, but he steadily poured the ball into the basket when his team needed him. Sixteen of Terry's points came in the first half as UNC built a 12-point lead, but he also scored the first four points of the second half when a UK run threatened to erase the deficit. "We were up, and we didn't have to rush anything," he said. "We knew we had to be more aggressive, come out and get our stops and get our runs."

essentially forced them to employ a six-person rotation. Despite their limitations, the visitors jumped out to an early 8-5 lead less than three minutes into the game. After that, though, the Bulls' offense went on a drought that seemed to permanently etch that '8' into the Carmichael Auditorium scoreboard. USF (5-1) scored its next point exactly 10 minutes of game time later and failed to successfully net another shot from the field until 3:40 remained in the half. But UNC (7-0) also suffered from offensive ineptitude as they entered halftime with a 32-17 lead — their lowest point output in a half this season. "We talked to our girls at halftime — if we can get the game down to single digits with 10 (minutes) to go, then you have a shot," said USF coach Jose Fernandez.

Just the opposite occurred. The Tar Heel offense began to click, with rapid ball movement contributing to several easy baskets. And the defense continued to stifle USF, including Big East scoring leader Jessica Dickson. With UNC's La'Tangela Atkinson as the primary stopper, Dickson managed just six points in the first half, though she finished with a game-high 18 after a couple of late 3-pointers. "I had to stay up on her, don't let her get too many catches, just make sure I have a hand in her face when she goes and takes her shots," Atkinson said. "That's what I did."

The Tar Heels had a balanced scoring attack, with Ivory Latta netting 16 points and Rashanda McCants adding 14. And all 14 women on the UNC roster saw the court — a feat that has transpired in all but one of UNC's seven games because of lopsided margins. That almost certainly will not be the case at the Hartford Civic Center tonight.

Despite his gaudy numbers, Terry still didn't play to his full potential in the eyes of his coach. He failed to maintain pace with guard Bobby Frasor on one fast-break opportunity, for example, costing the Tar Heels a chance to score. "He's a young man that wants to do the right thing, there's no question about that," Williams said. "He just has to keep his concentration a heck of a lot better."

But nowhere is concentration more necessary than at the free-throw line, and the forward shot a career-best 9-for-10 from that spot. Appropriately, it was Terry at the line with 5.7 seconds remaining, shooting to seal the win. "Don't miss these, Reyshawn!" a fan hollered from the second row. "Everybody's watching you!" Terry sank both.

The Huskies also have stars in guard Mel Thomas and forward Ann Strother, who both enter tonight's game averaging 15 points. Unlike South Florida, UConn has depth to match the Tar Heels.

Connecticut also will have a rowdy crowd behind them, with a sellout of more than 15,000 fans expected. "You dream about playing games like this, especially on (ESPN2)," Latta said. "Everybody's going to be focused on Sunday... We're just going to be focused to go up there and get the job done."

VOLLEYBALL

"We knew coming into this match that they were a very competitive team, a very feisty team and a great ball control team," he said. "And that proved to be, I think, a big difference tonight in the match."

The Tar Heels made an early run in game one, scoring the first six points before the Cougars (32-2, after losing to Purdue on Saturday) found their rhythm and answered with five in a row. From that point floor and make the easy play on offense," Miller said. But the three combined to score North Carolina's next 10 points, and Green's 3-pointer at the 10:47 mark of the first half gave the Tar Heels a lead they would not relinquish. And while Miller gave the Tar Heels (4-1) a spark, he also helped deprive Kentucky of its own — leading scorer Patrick Sparks.

Miller, Frasor and Marcus Ginyard combined to stifle both Sparks and guard Rajon Rondo, holding the pair to a combined 22 points in the first 39 minutes of the game. A Tyler Hansbrough dunk to close the first half stretched the lead to 12, but it seemed clear the 'Cats would respond after the intermission.

And they did, methodically slicing UNC's lead from 12 to 10 to eight to five after the break. But after Williams called for time to settle his young team, Kentucky began to make mistakes. Rondo missed with a wild shot on UK's first possession out of the huddle, and he threw an errant pass the next time he found the ball in his hands.

"You can't make those kind of mistakes when you're trying to make a run," said Kentucky coach Tubby Smith. The Wildcats still managed to cut the deficit to two with a 3-pointer from the top of the key, but baskets by Reyshawn Terry and Bobby Frasor quickly stretched the lead back to seven.

NCAA Tournament résumé impli-

9.5 of their own, a statistic Sagula said is uncharacteristic of the Tar Heels, who have averaged double digit kills throughout the season. And their lack of blocking might have cost them the match. Determined not to be ousted, the Cougars capitalized on a slew of service errors in game four and took the game to the wire for a dramatic rally that ended with a kill by right side hitter Rebecca Wieters on a set from Kaycie Carr. "Physically, it was the most draining experience of my entire life," said C of C outside hitter Amanda Timmers. "Emotionally, it was a roller coaster because we didn't know if the ball was going to drop on our side or on their side, and I think we just stayed really, really aggressive, and that's what enabled us to win it." And with that, North Carolina's first trip to the NCAA Tournament since 2002 was cut short. An exuberant College of Charleston team celebrated and took pictures on the court, while the teary-eyed Tar Heels digested the reality of the outcome. "College of Charleston played a good high percentage game," Sagula said. "I thought we'd get them though toward the end there, but we made it exciting for everyone."

ed Tar Heels, as SMU increased its lead barely five minutes into the half, when Duke Hashimoto put the ball past diving UNC keeper Justin Hughes.

SMU (14-5-3) used constant double teams to frustrate the UNC (17-4-3) offense throughout the game. The Mustangs were able to do something nobody else had been able to do lately — contain and frustrate star striker Ben Hunter. The Mustangs limited the him to only two weak shots on goal. Coming into the game, Hunter had scored the Tar Heels' previous seven goals in their last five contests.

Hunter clearly was off his game Saturday, as he was unable to convert on two free kicks — which have become his speciality — and his frustration showed when he earned a yellow card for stepping on a Mustang player. But Blake Beach scored his first career goal on a header with 30 minutes left to begin the comeback. Less than 20 minutes later, Brian Shriver crossed the ball through the box to defender Ted Odgers, who was able to net the equalizer.

Unable to score in the first overtime, North Carolina still carried plenty of momentum and dominated play, but the game looked destined to head into a shootout. That is until SMU's Michael Uremovich unleashed one of the prettiest shots anyone ever will see in college soccer.

Thirty-five yards from the goal and with no help around him, Uremovich turned and shot the ball far-post into the upper corner past a leaping Hughes to put the dagger in the heart of the Tar Heels. "He squeaked by and hit an amazing shot," Odgers said. "I don't know what to say about it really. I saw the ball go by me, and I turned around and looked in the corner, and that was it."

And that was it for the Tar Heels. The game, the season and their hopes for a National Championship — finished.

cations notwithstanding, the win serves as a strong confidence lift for a young team still reeling a bit from a hard-fought loss to Illinois. "To be able to bounce back and come beat Kentucky in Rupp Arena, that's big for us," Miller said. "We're not scared of anybody."
