APPLE CHILL

crime scene to be interviewed.

Additional gunfire was reported several blocks east, at Battle Lane and Franklin Street, about 45 minutes later.

Jarvies said the gunshot vic-tim found at Elliott Road did not have a life-threatening wound but added that there was no indication whether the wound was related to either incident.

He said that the incidents started coming in between 7 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. and that they kept 235 officers from 10 jurisdictions, including Chapel Hill, very busy.

Someone removed a shotgun from a car trunk at the Delta Upsilon fraternity house, at 407 Rosemary St., and brandished it but did not fire it.

There were also a number of brawls in the street.

He said that the violence of After Chill might need to be evaluated in the future.

"I think these are issues that need to be looked at after the night's over," he said.

Violence at the tail-end of Apple Chill, which brings large crowds of young people, has seen violence to varying degrees during the last several year

Though the evening caused trouble, the afternoon featured a mix of families, artists and musicians coming out to the town's largest street fair.

The sultry swing of jazz music drew dancers to the pavement of the Franklin Street post office plaza, who kicked up their heels in the hot sun Sunday

An estimated 50,000 people crossed and recrossed Franklin Street for Apple Chill, which drew 200 vendors to sell their fares and 1,000 motorcycle enthusiasts to the town's main thoroughfare. Operating from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m., Apple Chill is a Chapel Hill tradition since 1972, said Sonya Shaw, community celebrations supervisor. "We heard there would be music so we came," said Laura Windley, a dancing UNC law student.

The swing dancers were not the only people to throw it down at the fair, as six stages simultaneously belted blues, jazz, rock and country music, providing the opportunity for ad hoc dance.

Food vendors flaunted their fare as sausage, funnel cakes, ice cream and cotton candy were considerable attractions for Chill-goers.

"I've been craving butter pecan ice cream for weeks and nobody has it," said Gail Williams, a Salisbury resident waiting in line for Smitty's Homemade Ice Cream, ready to realize her dream.

Potters, painters, weavers and breadmakers sold their wares on the street as well.

In addition to providing an array of tasty treats, Apple Chill gave nonprofits and town groups including Habitat for Humanity and the Chapel Hill Fire Department the opportunity to advertise their services

One booth with the motto "no needles, no blood, no pain" provided free on-the-spot HIV testing, aiming to normalize testing and make people aware of infection.

"We started doing HIV testing at Apple Chill last year," said Blair Turner, research screener for UNC's AIDS Clinical Trials Unit. Turner's group hosts information sessions on campuses around the state, giving condom flowers as an effort to spread awareness Franklin Street's west end hosted the motorcycle show, an official part of the fair since 2003. "Motorcycles attract people Where there's motorcycles there's going to be people," said Anthony

"Ahz" Clark, a Greensboro Nu Breed Motorcycle Club member.

But Apple Chill is not all fun and games for some who are frustrated with the town's rerouted traffic, crowds and crime that come with

"I had to sit in traffic for like an hour," said Johnny Overton, a Durham resident and UNC graduate, recounting a past experi-

Franklin Street was blocked from Henderson to Graham streets. Columbia Street also closed from Rosemary Street to Cameron

Traffic even threw off campus staple the P2P, which was rerouted from its Ridge Road and South Road routes

Despite the controversy that surrounds it, Philip Sowers, a senior applied science major, lauded the fair for its ability to bring people together.

"You have bike people and 5year-old kids running around, people from Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill," he said while eating a gooey caramel apple.

"This apple is great," he said.
"I'm definitely going to need a shower after it."

> Contact the City Editor at citydesk@unc.edu.

45 Tyrannical leader

46 Kudos-47 Series of ranked stag-

Roasted sweet corn is dipped in butter for sale at a concession booth at the Apple Chill festival. About 200 booths lined Franklin Street for the event.

the carolina women's center announces

6th annual women's advocacy award

Reception Tuesday, April 25 3 p.m. Wilson Library Pleasants Room Everyone welcome!

The award recognizes an outstanding member of the faculty, staff or student body of UNC-CH, who has made a sustained contribution

on behalf of women,

supported women, or provided leadership in advocating for women.

Special consideration is given for service to underserved or under-recognized populations and service above and beyond one's job assignment. Former award recipients are: Mary Turner Lane, 2001; Laura Gasaway, 2002; Etta Pisano, 2003; Carol Lautier, 2004; and Jan

For more information, visit the CWC's Web site at: http://womenscenter.unc.edu

THE Daily Crossword Edited by Wayne Robert Williams 61 Snow unit 22 More fit 22 More itt
26 Actress Arlene
27 Ten-percent donation
28 Mine find
29 Lumber
30 Sea eagle
31 Snares Diplomat's asset Lake in northern Italy 62 __ en scene
63 Toward shelter
64 President before Polk
65 Hip ending?
66 Lemony

Sports place Part of a vise

Fuss
Eye membrane
Prefertilization seeds

Edible tubers

5 Lake in northern Italy
9 Skater's edge
14 Woody Guthrie's boy
15 D.C. office of note
16 Desert refuges
17 Enjoy a book
18 Reign
19 Portents
20 Day/MacRae musical
23 Blackjack
24 Two-finger sign
25 DDE's opponent
26 Heart rhythm
29 Harmless cyst
32 Song of exultation
35 Anger
36 Drill
37 1954 Oscar winner
41 Organic compound
42 Expression of derision
43 Assistants 43 Assistants 44 Weekday

abbr.
45 Canine rest stop?
48 Catch some rays 49 Operated 50 Middle

Eastern grp.
53 Willie Nelson classic
58 Close in poetry 59 Surrounded by 60 Sisters

6 Prefertilization seeds
7 Mauritania neighbor
8 Cassini of fashion
9 Knitted shoe
10 Ewe's offspring
11 On the briny
12 Declare untrue
13 Last letter of words?
21 Of sheep

48 Vertical post
50 Choreographer Abdul
51 Cruise ship
52 Beginning
53 Just
54 "Hud" star Patricia
55 Leaders of flocks
56 Leave out 31 Snares
32 Verse
33 Part of A.D.
34 Collar choice
36 Sailor's jail
38 High-pitched hum
39 Bern's river
40 Animals of a region 57 Insect pest 58 To the rear

What in TarNation?!

As a student you've used online communities to stay connected to high school and college friends. To help maintain Carolina friendships and connect with even more Tar Heels, be sure to add TarNation to your online community portfolio.

TarNation, the GAA's enhanced Online Alumni Directory, can help you connect to more than 240,000 Carolina alumni. Build your social and professional networks and maintain your strong ties to this great University.

- Invite fellow Carolina alumni to join your TarNation network
- Send and receive messages within your network of friends
- Send and receive event invitations
- Update your personal profile information

Start growing your TarNation network today.

Learn more at alumni.unc.edu/tarnation or e-mail gaa-online@unc.edu.

