An eighth sacrament?

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Pima, Ariz., couple resigned as the leaders of a church that considers marijuana a sacrament. Dan and Mary Quaintance said pending federal charges against them have made it impossible to lead the church. The two were arrested in February in a car containing 172 pounds of marijuana. Officials said they believe the church is a front for drug trafficking.

"If there isn't a favorable ruling on our religious freedom, then I don't believe there is a justice system in America," Dan Quaintance said.

NOTED. A 59-year-old man said he plans to invest in a cell phone after being trapped in his car for four days.

Raymond Vachon, who lost control of his car early Tuesday, ate the Wheat Thin crackers in his car and drank the dew off leaves and his windshield. He was rescued Saturday morning after a man heard his cries.

QUOTED. "I love to eat, and I love to compete, so the two go pretty well together."

— Richard LeFevre, a 62-year-old retired accountant from Nevada, on how he swallowed 247 peppers in eight minutes to win the Jalapeno Eating World Championship at the State Fair of Texas. LeFevre's feat earned him $2,000.
