Oklahoma legalizes it ... well, tattoos

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Oklahoma will become the last state to legalize tattooing Wednesday when their new pro-tattooing law goes into effect. In preparation for the change, the state Department of Health has been swamped with inquiries about acquiring a license to practice the ancient art. Those hoping to acquire a license must have professional experience in tattooing or have completed an approved apprentice program. There is also a standardized test, medical procedure requirements, and a surety bond of $100,000. "The laws make it a little more difficult for the average Joe to pick up a tattoo machine and say he knows what he's doing," said Brandon Mull, a member of Oklahoma Tattooing and Piercing Association and the Oklahoma Body Art Coalition.

NOTED. Japanese eating champion Takeru Kobayashi improved his own world-hamburger-eating record by 28 burgers and won his third straight Krystal hamburger-eating contest Saturday in the process. Kobayashi, who is also the Nathan's hot-dog-eating champion, ate 97 burgers in eight minutes. Kobayashi weighs 172 pounds.

QUOTED. "It's a great excuse to dress up in skanky clothes, get wasted and see everyone you know."
— Sophomore Emily Schrag on why she thinks college students get so excited for Halloween.
More than 50,000 patrons filled Franklin Street's last year for Chapel Hill's annual holiday party.
