After round one of the student body president election, Eve Carson and Nick Neptune were left standing and will battle head-to-head in a runoff election Tuesday.

Carson received 40 percent of votes cast, while Neptune got 33 percent. The 7,441 total votes cast represented the highest voter turnout in student election history.

The results are considered complete once candidates submit their financial statements today. A runoff election is held when no candidate garners more than 50 percent of votes.

The overtime finish of the UNC men's basketball team's game against Virginia Tech heightened the tension in Carroll Hall 111.

Just after 11:30 p.m. the Board of Elections entered the room to widespread applause from the anxious candidates and supporters.

As the vote was announced, Carson and her supporters cheered loudly and hugged.

"I'm thrilled," she said. "I'm thrilled that we have another week to reach out to students."

Neptune's response was more subdued. He shook hands with those around him, including his parents, John and Donna Neptune.

"I think it's terrific," he said. "I look forward to the runoff."

The third-place finisher, Caroline Spencer, garnered 13 percent of the vote and said she will consider other student government options.

Almond wins CAA president in a landslide

After facing a year marked by criticism and scrutiny, the Carolina Athletic Association will welcome Colby Almond to its top position.

"I'm very excited," Almond said Tuesday night after the announcement. "We campaigned and got our ideas out there, and the students showed up."

Almond won the presidency by a substantial margin over competitor Marcus Carpenter, who lacked experience within the CAA and ran on a platform of increasing students' voices in the organization.

Almond won 3,748 votes, with Carpenter trailing by 1,618.

"I would say I was disappointed, but we ran a good campaign and got a lot of good ideas out there," Carpenter said.

Almond said he already is lining up plans for when he takes office in early April and for tackling his platform.

"We're going to start taking CAA to the next level," he said. "We'll start by getting student input on the new ticket policy."

Addressing the ticket distribution system is one of Almond's top priorities, he said.

The basketball ticket distribution system has come under fire since officials announced a change from the bracelet system to an online registration this summer.

And with last week's announcement of plans for general admission seating, Almond has said he

Lauren Anderson retained her post as Graduate and Professional Student Federation president Tuesday night, fending off competition from write-in candidate Doug Whitfield.

GPSF President Lauren Anderson will focus on finishing the job.

"I'm relieved," said Anderson, who did not attend Tuesday's election announcement.

Anderson received 311 votes, or 57 percent of the vote. Whitfield earned 210 votes, or 38 percent.

not," Whitfield said. "It's as easy as that."

Whitfield said he hopes to become active in Student Congress in the future.

"That's something I've thought about," he said. "We need to have more representation."

Whitfield also said he hopes Anderson will execute the campuswide peer-review journal and the senior mentoring program that appeared on his platform for office.

Anderson said she plans to work on some of Whitfield's plat-

Sugg officially nets RHA president job

Uncontested candidate eager for months ahead

BY SERGIO TOVAR

Tuesday night was more of a confirmation than a surprise victory for Brian Sugg.

As the only candidate running for Residence Hall Association president, Sugg won the race by a wide margin, receiving 3,037 votes to become the next RHA president.

No one ran a write-in campaign, and the next place finisher only earned four votes.

"Two years ago to this very day at N.C. State (University), I had no idea where my life was going," Sugg said after the announcement Tuesday night in Carroll Hall.

"To be here today and to have this special opportunity makes me feel very privileged."

As his name was announced, Sugg showed his excitement by giving a high five to one of his supporters.
