Man swindles paper with 'Gucci' ad

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Some people will do anything to appear in the papers. But few have the audacity of a man in Switzerland, who conned one of the country's biggest media companies into publishing a two-page ad he created of himself posing semi-naked beside a bottle of Gucci perfume. The man, who claimed to represent the Italian fashion giant, called up the Swiss weekly SonntagsZeitung last week to book the expensive color spread in Sunday's edition, a spokesman for the paper said.

Christoph Zimmer told The Associated Press on Tuesday that the man asked for the 60,000-Swiss-franc (about $50,000) bill to be sent to Gucci.

"We've spoken to Gucci and apologized for the mistake," Zimmer said. "We're going to try and get the money back from this guy, but we don't rate our chances."

NOTED. The newest addition to the menu at Denny's Beer Barrel Pub in Pennsylvania is one whopper of a burger.

The Beer Barrel Main Event Charity Burger weighs in at 123 pounds, a meaty monstrosity that its cooks maintain shatters the world record of 105 pounds shared by two restaurants in New Jersey and Thailand.

There's a pretty hefty price tag, too: $379.

QUOTED. "She learned her lesson. Program your dealers into your phone."

— Kentucky State Police spokesman Barry Meadows on how Ann Greenfield, 34, a teacher at a Kentucky middle school, sent a text message about a marijuana purchase to a state trooper instead of her dealer.

Greenfield was suspended with pay pending results of an investigation.
