Drunk man's mistake bails out brother

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A ruse worked for an Arkansas man who used his brother's name after being picked up for another drunk-driving charge — until he called his brother and asked him to bail him out of jail.

Police said an officer arrested Sebastian Nabor, 28, early Sunday after the car Nabor was driving hit a curb. When Officer Ernesto Echevarria smelled alcohol and found an open container of beer in the car, Nabor gave his name as Antonio Moreno Nabor. The suspect failed a field sobriety test and a breath test.

Nabor was charged with driving while intoxicated and called his brother to bail him out. As the paperwork was being processed, officers realized the arrested man had given the wrong name.

NOTED. A Peeping Tom seen peering into a second-floor window at Matt Edgerton's apartment in Wisconsin fled before Edgerton could catch him, but he left a key piece of evidence behind — his ladder.

Edgerton, 24, said he and a date were at home when he noticed a shadow move across his bedroom window. When he pulled back the curtain, he was face-to-face with a middle-aged man.

QUOTED. "For an old lady, I still hit the ball pretty good."

— Elsie McLean, 102, on how she became the oldest golfer ever to make a hole-in-one on a regulation course. McLean, who used a driver to bring in an ace on the fourth hole at Bidwell Park in Chico, Calif., will appear on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" on April 24 to celebrate her accomplishment.

Weekend Campus Roundup

SWEAT 5K and egg hunt

SWEAT sponsored a 5K run/walk and an egg hunt Saturday morning.

About 150 runners participated in the event that also offered music, arts and crafts. The event was attended mostly by members of the Chapel Hill community since a large portion of students were not in town because of the Easter holiday.

The event raised about $2,500 for the Family Alliance for Development and Cooperation, which is a sustainable development organization that works in communities of western Tanzania.

Best-selling author speaks

Anna Lappe, author of "Grub: Ideas for an Urban Organic Kitchen," spoke about her new book to a small group of people Thursday afternoon in the BlueCross BlueShield Auditorium of the Michael Hooker Research Center.

Lappe is also the co-author of "Hope's Edge: The New Diet for a Small Planet."

OASIS art show, auction

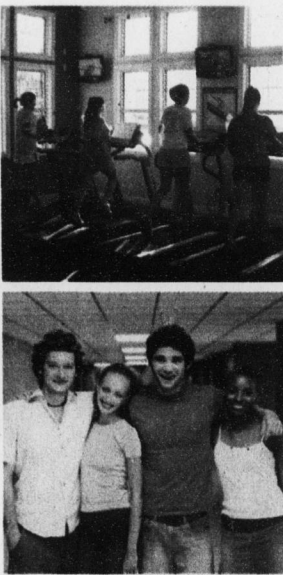

OASIS ACTS Initiative, a services subgroup of the Organization for African Students Interests and Solidarity, hosted an exhibition and a charity auction Thursday at the Sonja Haynes Stone Center.

OASIS ACTS partnered with Share the Blessings, and all of the event's proceeds went toward funding the education of children in Uganda. The art pieces auctioned were donated by Chaz Maviyane Davies, a design artist of Zimbabwean descent, and Emeka Okoro, an underground artist who creates abstract African paintings.
