Police hire real-life Miss Congeniality

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Miss America can do more than walk in heels — it turns out she can fight crime, too. Lauren Nelson, current wearer of the tiara, went undercover with New York police to catch sexual predators.

Officers in Suffolk County's computer crimes unit created an online profile of a 14-year-old girl for Nelson that included pictures of the beauty queen as a teenager. Nelson said she would go into chat rooms where men would send her instant messages asking her how old she was and where she lived.

"America's Most Wanted" filmed the operation and will broadcast the segment Saturday on Fox. A spokesman for the show said at least four men were arrested.

NOTED. Just like Brandon Wright, Nicole Matisse will go to college for only one year. But unlike Wright, Matisse will end the year with a degree.

The 19-year-old University of Michigan student is on track to graduate this spring despite having attended the college for only two semesters.

Matisse took 27 credits this spring.

QUOTED. "Nigel thought it was just because he was wearing too much clothing — that if he just took his jacket off it would be cooler."

— Rob Reiner, director of "This is Spinal Tap," on the mock heavy-metal group's reasons for reuniting to play July 7 in London as part of the Live Earth concerts scheduled worldwide.

Reiner also will direct a 15-minute documentary on the band's reunion.

HE'S GOT HOPS

DTH/ALLIE MULLIN

Freshman math major Dale Saunders plays Frisbee on Wednesday during the RESNET social outside Teague Residence Hall. "The line was too long for food, so we played until it got shorter," Saunders said. The cookout was the last event of the year for the program.
