Butt Cam offers shoppers new view

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Worried that new pair of high-fashion jeans may just make your butt look fat? Now shoppers in one upscale Scottsdale, Ariz., store can check it out for themselves before someone else makes the observation — using the Butt Cam, a camera positioned just so and connected to a video screen on a dressing-room wall.

The setup also allows Hub Clothing employees to display views of their more confident shoppers on flat-screen TVs behind the cash registers for all to see.

"They want to look good to other people, not just themselves," said co-owner Tom Simon, who came up with the Butt Cam after watching customers twist and turn in front of mirrors to check out their derrieres.

NOTED. Distributor Atlas Co. said Tuesday it will remove all 150 "Arm Spirit" arm wrestling machines from Japanese arcades after three players broke their arms grappling with the machine's mechanized appendage.

"We think that maybe some players get overexcited and twist their arms in an unnatural way," said Atlas spokeswoman Ayano Sakiyama.

QUOTED. "I could probably get a job and stay here, but I'm not willing to part with my mule. ... He's my best friend, and I'm not getting rid of him for nothing."

— Rod Maday, after ending a 1,500-mile trek on muleback from Minnesota to Gillette, Wyo. Maday said he came looking for work, but was leaving because some teenagers had yelled "uncalled for" things while he was riding in.
