Teens lucky: 'Death' not packing heat

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Attorney Michael J. Brezinski, 54, was walking to his car outside a Burton, Mich., mall when he heard a pop and felt a sting on his neck. The longtime rugby player, who goes by the name "Dr. Death," then chased two teens, aged 14 and 15, who were smirking and hiding their hands and then ran when asked if they shot him with a BB gun. The teens were chased and then tackled by Brezinski, and they eventually were charged with assault. The attorney was not hurt, but he said the teens were the lucky ones. Brezinski had taken target practice earlier that day and decided not to carry his .45-caliber Ruger to the mall. He said there was no guarantee he would have known the teen had pulled only a BB gun. "I think God was looking out for them and me," Brezinski said.

NOTED. Australian customs officers discovered more than 10 ounces of ecstasy tablets hidden inside a Mr. Potato Head toy sent there from Ireland.

When officers removed a panel from the back of the potato-shaped wonder toy, the officers found 10.34 ounces of ecstasy in a plastic bag. The maximum penalty for bringing drugs into Australia is life in prison.

QUOTED. "It's not dangerous because, first, her swimming skills are really good."

— Beijing resident Huang Daosheng, after binding his 10-year-old daughter's hands and ankles and watching her swim for three hours in a cold southern China river.

The girl swam by moving like a dolphin and paddling with her bound hands. Daosheng said her goal is to one day swim the English Channel.

Pamina Devi:
A Cambodian Magic Flute

"EXOTIC ... FLUID ...
AN AMAZING EXPERIENCE."
— SALZBURGER NACHRICHTEN

Friday, October 5 | 8pm | Memorial Hall

The brilliant classicism of imperial Vienna meets the mythic splendor of ancient Angkor in Pamina Devi: A Cambodian Magic Flute, a contemporary re-imagining of Mozart's fantastical opera. Performed in the refined, elaborate movement language of Cambodian classical dance and accompanied by a live instrumental ensemble, 32 dancers and singers take the stage to explore Mozart's masterpiece.
