Postgame beer healthier than water

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Enjoying a beer after playing a game of football or a long run can be better for the body than water, Spanish scientists said.

Researchers say beer can help someone who is dehydrated retain liquid better than water.

Professor Manuel Garzon, of Granada University, said that the bubbles in beer help to quench the thirst and that beer's carbohydrate content can help to replace lost calories.

Juan Antonio Corbalan, a cardiologist who worked formerly with Real Madrid football players and Spain's national basketball team, said beer had the perfect profile for rehydration after sport.

NOTED. Police said one of Zimbabwe's leading athletes, who has won gold medals in women's events, is really a man.

Samukeliso Sithole said that she was born with both male and female sexual organs and that a traditional healer had made the penis disappear but that it had since regrown.

She told the court the penis had returned because the healer had not been fully paid.

QUOTED. "I took out my knife and jokingly told the boys I would take care of the deer if it attacked."

— Arkansas hunter Greg Vincent describing the scene before a buck in rut attacked him, his 13-year-old son and a nephew on a hunting trip.

When the deer became aggressive, Vincent grabbed the antlers, jerked the deer's head around and stabbed it in the ribs.

TAKE THE TRIP!

This psychedelic 1979 "farewell concert" explores the outrageous life of fictional rock star Cameron Seymour (alter ego of Cynthia Hopkins of Gloria Deluxe). Under CIA surveillance, on the eve of exile to Morocco and hilariously disconnected, this character sweeps audiences up into a raucous and hilarious blend of concert, spectacle and theater.
