Bathroom naming not a crappy deal

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A second-floor bathroom in a University of Colorado technology building will now bear venture capitalist Brad Feld's name.

Feld, who paid $25,000, requested the following words of wisdom be placed on the plaque adorning the wall: "The best ideas often come at inconvenient times. Don't ever close your mind to them."

Feld was rejected by his alma mater, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"I just wanted a plaque outside of the men's room to inspire people as they walk in to do their business," Feld said.

His only requirement? That it be tasteful, said John Bennett, director of the Alliance for Technology, Learning and Society.

NOTED. A 27-year-old woman with ties to North Carolina was found to have married men in every military branch but the Coast Guard.

According to authorities, Shauna Keith married a man in the army in Kentucky in 2006, then married a marine in Georgia in 2007.

She then allegedly went back to her N.C. apartment and was living with another marine when police located her.

QUOTED. "I said, 'OK, release the cuffs, I'm taking him.' They told me, 'No, Miss. You're not taking him anywhere.'"

— New York City baby sitter Sandy Ortiz, who was unable to take 5-year-old Dennis Rivera home because an elementary school safety agent cuffed the boy's hands behind his back using metal restraints, the Daily News reported. Rivera was cuffed after he threw a tantrum.
