Man halts unusually clingy ex-lover

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

When Timothy Mortimore broke up with his girlfriend after six months, he expected to have nothing more to do with her. She had other ideas. Lee Amor used her cell phone to contact him more than 10,000 times in 65 days, which is the equivalent of once every eight minutes, the London Daily Mail reported.

Wrongly convinced her unborn baby was Mortimore's, Amor sent her 37-year-old ex-beau used pregnancy tests and even left a bottle of urine on his doorstep in an apparent attempt to show him he was the father.

She followed him and his new partner by car, demanding attention.

Mortimore successfully took out a restraining order last week.

NOTED. A man who brought feces to a courtroom in hopes of proving his insanity instead received life in prison.

Jurors found him guilty of multiple felony counts from an October 2006 attempted murder and robbery.

"This was an unusual one," prosecutor Chinwe Fossett told jurors, as reported in the St. Petersburg Times.

QUOTED. "I'm not 'man.' I'm not 'dude.' I am Officer Rivieri. The sooner you learn that, the longer you are going to live in this world because you go around doing this kind of stuff, and somebody is going to kill you."

— A now-infamous Baltimore police officer, chastising a 14-year-old skateboarder for back-talking. The officer also put the boy in a headlock during the incident, which is now on YouTube.

Expert tips: learning chess

Whether it's an uncontrollable habit or a guilty pleasure, playing chess is a game many students take up to relieve the burden of class schedules.

John Timmel, chess master and co-manager of the Carolina Cobras of the United States Chess League, emphasizes that persistent practice is the best way to earn the elite status of an official "chess expert."

Here are a few suggestions for those craving to become the next Bobby Fischer.

■ Hit up the web. Timmel points out that there is "tons of great information" on the Internet. Check out www.uschess.org.

■ Read a book, read a book. There are also many books devoted to mastering the game. Timmel claims this method is "the easiest way to teach one's self."

■ Get out there. Timmel holds chess sessions every two weeks at the Chapel Hill Community Center, where you can go for free tips and advice. Go to home.nc.rr.com/orangechess for more details.

■ Don't get discouraged. Mastering chess can take quite some time, especially if you're starting at the beginner level. Lots of people play the game, so it shouldn't be too hard to find somebody that is in the same skill range as you are.
