

North Carolina coach Sylvia Hatchell instructs her team Sunday. UNC plays Georgia in the second round of the NCAA Tournament on Tuesday.

With 10 points, DeGraffenreid was one of five UNC players in double figures. Senior center LaToya Pringle led the charge with 19 points while Larkins and McCants each dropped 15 and Jessica Breland added 14 off the bench.

After a quiet first half, Breland scored 12 in the second period, including a stretch in which she scored eight straight for the Tar Heels. Her inside game, along with that of the post starters, helped UNC to a 44-18 scoring advantage in the paint.

"I keep saying that's the strength of our team is our balance and our depth," UNC coach Sylvia Hatchell said. "Of course, everybody on the team played, but it's good that we spread out the scoring."

For Bucknell (16-16), the woes began at the opening tip and didn't get much better. The Bison were held to just 26.7 percent shooting for the afternoon as a relentless UNC attack wore them down.

The Tar Heels began with a full-court press after every made basket and dead ball and kept up the breakneck pace until the final whistle.

"I guess we're just on the go," said DeGraffenreid, the speediest of the Tar Heels. "(Hatchell's) just always like, 'Go, go, go.' So even if you're tired, you just gotta suck it up and just go." But as the scoring margin continued to swell, Hatchell was disappointed with a drop in the sense of urgency that her team demonstrated on the court. "It's been a couple of weeks since we've played, and I think it was pretty obvious at times our intensity level wasn't what it needed to be and what the play-ers wanted it to be," she said after the game.

Both Hatchell and the players emphasized the need to keep up that intensity for all 40 minutes in the later rounds of the tournament, But McCants said just being on the court in a game situation will help.

We've been practicing a whole lot, but practice is nothing like going up and down the floor," she said

"It's good to get the first win and gel together and get our chemistry right before our next game. And think it did us good because we definitely have to work on our intensity level. It just shows that you definitely can't take anything lightly."

"Every year we have a theme, a saying we want to do for the sea-son," Bosica said.

"Before we get in the huddle we scream, 'Wreck it'. Like, go kick some butt. Wreck it."

And in the two-goal win, the Ellicott City, Md., native did just that.

"I think the way we came out, after that loss, Duke might have thought they were going to cream us like Virginia did," she said.

But Bosica wrecked any chances of that, in high-scoring and highintensity fashion. Coming into the game, Bosica had scored 14 goals in eight games while tallying seven assists. With her eight-point performance, she is tied for second on the team with 18 on her backup, Regan Bosch, however, ultimately reaching 16-11 with 10 minutes left.

Duke stormed back, powered largely by Megan Del Monte, who scored two goals in a span of 16 seconds, but ultimately the Tar Heels were able to salt away the clock to preserve the final two goal margin.

North Carolina had to expect such a game, because, after all, 11 of the last 20 matchups were in the post because, you know, she can't block shots if they don't try to shoot," Sylvia Hatchell said.

"So sometimes, especially if it's a close game, I'll say, 'Alright 'Toya, stop letting your man catch the ball and blocking shots." With the record she strove for all season now firmly hers and out of the way, Pringle can focus even more on locking down opposing offenses — and making her coach happier.

Now I can focus more on not even letting my girl catch it instead of trying to block shots," she said. "Hopefully my post defense will goals, and her four assists put her atop the North Carolina stat sheet in that category. She appeared to be everywhere on offense in the first half. She scored her first goal unassisted at 19:44 mark and assisted Erica LaGrow's goal on the next UNC possession.

At the 10:08 mark, Bosica assisted a goal by sophomore Kristen Taylor and raced past defenders off the next draw and shot the ball with such authority that it rolled into the net, even after the ball was deflected. "She played out of her mind,"

Taylor said of her teammate. "It really jump-started our whole offense

Levy said she's looked to a couple of players to lead the offense, namely Bosica, Taylor, senior Julia Ryan and junior Chelsea Parks. "After the loss against Virginia last weekend, we really talked to some kids and said that you have to do certain things for our team to be successful," Levy said. "And Meggy rose to the challenge."

But Bosica wasn't the only one. The Tar Heels' up-tempo transition attack included seven scorers. And Kristen and Kelly Taylor added three goals apiece to capture the win.

"(Bosica) is a special kid, and she's a special player," Levy said. "But I also feel like I have a lot of kids on the field like that."

"We've been needing something from that four spot, and I think it's about time, especially around the tournament, that it steps up," Stepheson said.

For Thompson, that step up started with a different practice strategy this week.

"We worked hard in practice about shooting shots that he shoots in the game," Williams said. "I even got a tape and showed part of his routine for 10 straight practices, and he was not shooting the shots he shoots in a game, and I think he got refocused." Evidently, the pair is out of the
