Hospital gives a royal pain the butt

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A retired German woman is suing a hospital after receiving a new anus instead of having her leg operated on, The Daily Telegraph reports. The woman woke up to find that her case had been mixed up with another patient in the hospital.

The other patient had been suffering from incontinence and was to have surgery on her sphincter.

The hospital clinic in Hochfranken, Bavaria, has since suspended the entire surgical team.

However, the woman still needs the leg operation. She is searching for another hospital to do it.

NOTED. A New York businessman is suing a strip club, claiming he was injured when a stripper giving him a lap dance swiveled and smacked him in the face with the heel of her shoe.

According to the lawsuit, as the dancer swung around, the heel of her shoe hit Stephen Chang, a securities trader. He said in court papers filed Friday that he was hit in the eye, causing him "serious injuries."

QUOTED. "I then decided to match it with a bigger symbol of manliness — a gun license."

— Manish Shrivastav, an Indian administrative chief, who is trying to persuade men to undergo sterilization by offering to fast-track their gun license applications.

The plan comes as India, which has a population of 1.1 billion people, is trying to encourage people to have smaller families to ease poverty.

"It's our right as students to know ... what is going on around us; it's our duty to be smart and take precautions to protect ourselves and others. I'm not suggesting that we never leave our homes or start stereotyping the people with whom we interact but that we be realistic about the issues facing our community."
