Medic loses car for CPR

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Navy medic who stopped to help give CPR to a man suffering a heart attack ended up with a $60 towing bill.

Hospital Corpsman 3rd Class Tim Moore pulled over after seeing an ambulance parked along a highway. When the rescuers learned of Moore's training, they asked if he would help with CPR.

Moore returned to the interstate two hours later, but the car had been deemed a hazard and towed.

NOTED: The winner of the Acme World Oyster Eating championship sucked down 35 dozen — or 420 oysters.

Patrick "Deep Dish" Bertoletti, 22, took the New Orleans contest after eating the bivalves in eight minutes.

Deep Dish also holds the record for endurance eating, having downed 642 oysters in a 2007 competition.

QUOTED: "At this point they're almost like a mascot."

— Jeff Cleasby, sales manager for the P.M. Bedroom Gallery store in Illinois, about two Canadian geese who live above the storefront.

The geese draw people in to the store, Cleasby said, but they also have been known to draw blood from passersby while protecting their nest.
