 During the offseason, three Tar Heels are playing in the highest stage of international competition: the Olympics.

The USA Field Hockey team is competing in the Olympic Qualifier in Kazan, Russia, to earn a berth in the 2008 Summer Games.

Dawson, with teammates Katelyn Falgowski and Jesse Gey, will join former UNC players Kate Barber, Carrie Lingo and Amy Tran to represent the United States. Altogether, UNC supplies one-third of the 18 active players on the team.

Competition began on April 19 and will finish on the 27th. Falgowski, a freshman, is the youngest player to make the roster and will be the only college student on the team.

NBA QUESTIONS

 At that night's press conference, Wayne Ellington, Tyler Hansbrough and Ty Lawson were forced to address questions about the NBA Draft and their future prospects as Tar Heels.

"I haven't thought about that at all. I was just focused on the season," Ellington said after the game. "I'm definitely going to talk to my parents and, you know, see."

More than two weeks later, no news has emerged, forcing UNC fans to play the guessing game until April 27's deadline to declare for the draft.

While the Tar Heels will add three blue-chip freshmen —

"It was like that wasn't (UNC) out there... It looked like we never played basketball before."

Larry Drew, Ed Davis and Tyler Zeller — to the mix, the decisions of Ellington, Hansbrough and Lawson should determine if North Carolina can repeat the success of this season and win the national championship that eluded it this April.

 Pringle's point total average jumped from 9.7 last year to 14.6 with this year's squad.

Their contributions earned them first round selections in the WNBA Draft.

Fittingly, their names were called back-to-back. Pringle went to the Phoenix Mercury with the 13th overall pick, and Larkins was called by the New York Liberty at 14.

While the two seniors solidified the Tar Heels' core, their supporting cast played essential parts in the historic season.

Rashanda McCants took the momentum from the end of her sophomore campaign to become a scoring threat from every spot on the court.

"We needed more scoring on the perimeter and some more dribble penetration and all, and Rashanda has really stepped up and done much more of that," Hatchell said.

McCants got help on the perimeter from freshman Cetera DeGraffenreid. The point guard had the challenge of taking over the position after Miller's injury, and the transition was nearly seamless.

"I don't know if another freshman has done more for a team than what (DeGraffenreid) has done," Hatchell said.

The Tar Heels also got the production they needed off the bench. Jessica Breland was named the ACC's Sixth Player of the Year, with 10.6 points per game.

Not only did she average double figures, but her baskets always seemed to come when UNC needed a spark.

Next year she'll likely be leading the team down low on her own.

Again, UNC will graduate two of its top players. But if this year is any indication, new Tar Heels will step up to fill the spots and keep UNC a national contender.

 batting average and have at least one player in the top five of almost every major batting statistical category.

As the fastest team in the nation to 35 wins, UNC has racked up some Ws that speak for themselves, including its most recent 11-game winning streak and a 17-0 obliteration of Charlotte on Tuesday.

But still, the true challenges for North Carolina's season remain. Perennial national powerhouses Miami and Florida State are still to come on the schedule, as is Virginia.

Regardless of how much the Tar Heels think they have established themselves, that brutal home stretch will serve as the litmus test for most observers still on the fence about just how good North Carolina really is this season.

 "I think people are still questioning how good we are or we aren't," coach Mike Fox said following Wednesday's 10-5 victory against High Point.

"We've kind of been down that road before.

"I don't think confidence is an issue. I think the mystique of us playing the Florida States and the Miamis has been erased the last couple of years."
