

Food options aplenty at UNC

Meals and snacks available on campus

Getting the munchies in those scant 15 minutes between classes might seem problematic. But with choices across campus and ranging from sit-down dinners to in-and-out snacks, you can quell your hunger without a problem.

Top of Lenoir and Rams Head

Take a ride up the escalator in Lenoir Dining Hall, and you'll find buffet-style stations serving wraps, rotisserie, salads and the ever-popular cereal and waffle bar, among other choices.

With an entrance that spills out into the Pit during the noontime rush, it's a great place to meet people, as long as you have the sense to grab a table before the flood comes in.

The second freestanding dining hall on UNC's campus is located on South Campus, a convenient walk from the gym and most South Campus dorms. It's got most of the same things you'll find in Lenoir — but with its own flair.

The two dining halls take cash or credit cards per meal, but they also offer meal plan options that include a "block" number of meals per semester or a weekly meal plan that allocates seven or 14 meals per week all semester. You can use your meal plan to sit down and have dinner, or you can get it to go.

You can get more information at dining.unc.edu, and you can add or remove a meal plan at www.onecard.unc.edu under "Manage Your Account."

Don't fear, though, if you're craving something different or quicker than a whole meal. There is plenty of food beyond the dining halls. Here are a couple of popular choices.

Main Street at Lenoir

On the first floor of Lenoir Dining Hall are options for fast food, including everything from Mediterranean Deli to chicken sandwiches from Chick-fil-A to sushi and Indian curry.

Rams Head Market

Below Rams Head Dining Hall is a grocery store and Subway from which students can settle their appetite for cookies and chips, and they can grab a take-out meal, which can be purchased using a meal plan.

Alpine Bagel Cafe

It's in the Student Union, just inside the doors on the Pit level, and offers up fresh bagels and coffee seven days a week, and they open early enough for you to grab something on the way to that 8 a.m. class. They've got sandwiches, fruit, practically-famous homemade orange juice and yogurt, too.

Student Stores

In its own corner of the Student Stores in Daniels Building, mixed in with the Bull's Head Bookshop, is the Daily Grind, which serves up strong coffee, lattes and pastries every day.

Opposite the Daily Grind is a convenience store with a freezer stocking sandwiches and the like, as well as a giant selection of candy sold by weight.

Of course there are others, and Franklin Street is perennially turning over another burrito joint, but this is the abbreviated guide to where to eat when you're on campus.

Long lines form at the escalators to Top of Lenoir during peak hours such as noon and 5 p.m., when students flood in to grab a bite to eat.
