Man's drunk birthday goes too far

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Naples, Fla., man celebrated his 23rd birthday by swimming naked in a river, screaming at himself and spitting in the face of the police officer who handcuffed him.

The man repeatedly refused to come to shore or to disclose his name. But after persistent prompting, he eventually gave in to the officer's questioning, and claimed to be Jesus Christ.

In court Monday, the man pleaded for probation, saying that he was just trying to celebrate his birthday.

"Get a cape next time," the judge said after granting the man a plea bargain. "It was humorous in a way, but you could have drowned."

NOTED. Trends show that fewer Japanese women are having babies because they don't want to get married to childish Japanese men.

Middle-aged women are refusing to settle for men who work long hours, refuse to help with child-rearing and view marriage simply as a way to acquire live-in help. The percentage of Japanese women who remain single into their 30s has more than doubled since 1980.

QUOTED. "Children are not meant to be sexually active."

— a 64-year-old woman said to a judge in court after checking out the book "It's Perfectly Normal: Changing Bodies, Growing Up, Sex and Sexual Health" from a Maine public library and refusing to return it because she said it's "dangerous" to children. She said she is prepared to go to jail rather than return the book.
