

Clef Hangers warm up their vocal cords

Steve McQuaid and his fellow vocalists have decisions to make. It's 5 p.m. Monday, and during the next several hours, dozens of Clef Hanger hopefuls will audition for a part in the group.

"What we're looking for is a talented, well-rounded guy — someone we can see ourselves hanging out with," McQuaid said. "If they meet those criteria, they're serious contenders."

Auditions continue today, and members of the group urged auditioners not to be nervous.

"We want everyone to have a good audition," said senior Will Thompson. "The more people try out, the more options we have."

money to encourage voter registration among high school seniors.

Doucette's message of efficacy appears to already resonate with members.

UNC-Asheville Student Body President Nick Ladd, whose school stopped participating in ASG business last year, was at the meeting Saturday. He said the school plans to resume involvement.

Ladd also said that although this meeting was mostly about working out kinks in the budget and constitution, he expects to see more initiatives spurred by the student representatives in upcoming months.

"I think things have been off to a really positive start," Ladd said.

Constitutional revisions, which passed unanimously, should encourage increased input, Doucette said.

"It's not just me as president setting the agenda, it's the students setting the agenda," he said.

tics — they might not be political junkies."

Chilukuri added that Penn uses his fame to get people who might not normally come to a political rally excited about Obama.

During his presentation, Penn related his personal reasons for supporting Obama and answered students' questions about the candidate's platform points.

As a registered independent, Penn said he was cynical about politicians for much of his youth — until he tuned into the 2004 Democratic National Convention and heard Obama's keynote speech.

"This skinny guy with big ears starts speaking," he said. "And that one line about how there shouldn't be blue states and red states, we should focus on being the United States kind of got me perked up."

"By the end of his speech I remember thinking, 'Wow, this guy really needs to run for president.'"

Penn said when he heard Obama was running for president, he immediately looked into the candidate and was pleased with what he found.

"He taught Constitutional law for 10 years, and my friends and I joked that it would be nice to have a president who'd actually read the Constitution," he said.

Many members of Penn's audience were already interested in the campaign but said they enjoyed hearing another opinion in support of the candidate.

"I'm already an Obama supporter, but hearing it from him made a lot of sense," junior Brandy Renaud said.

Department of Exercise and Sport Science that recommended changes to reduce liability and combat larceny.

Straight said he now accepts the policy as a way to reduce the risk of theft or other crimes.

"I understand it better now than I did at the time. Times have changed in terms of risk management," he said.

Visitors can buy a guest pass for a single day or for a weekend, as long as they have a host with a valid One Card. A day pass is $5 and a weekend pass is $15. Visitors must be with their student hosts at all times.

Year-long and semester passes are available for the families of faculty members, but there are no options for someone with no connection to the University.

A student playing basketball at Woolen Gym, junior psychology major Trent Womble, said he let friends from other universities use his One Card to get into campus facilities in the past.

Neither he nor his friends got in trouble.

"It's a little bit of a hassle, but I guess it's understandable," he said about the crackdown.
