Man forced to divorce 82 of 86 wives

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

An 84-year-old preacher who has 86 wives said he intends to marry more women. But local Islamic elders have put forth an order that Mohammed Bello must divorce all but four of his wives by Sunday or leave the country. Bello, who lives in Nigeria with his wives and at least 170 children, has received a number of death threats during the last few weeks after Nigerian journalists began to report on his unique situation.

Nigerian newspapers have reported that Bello had agreed to divorce the wives at a recent meeting, but asked that he have enough time to return them to their families. But Bello's spokesman has denied such claims, stating that Bello has every intention of keeping his current wives and pursuing more.

NOTED. Ever wonder why TV reporters feel compelled to cover weather by standing in it? After all, reporters don't rush into a burning building when covering a fire, or stand on the front line while covering a war.

The Washington Post addressed the phenomenon in an article Tuesday, critiquing a Baton Rouge TV reporter who reported on-scene during Hurricane Gustav.

QUOTED. "It sucks, man. That's not a Mr. Rogers thing to say. But maybe in this case he'd even say it."

— South Carolina writer Brian Linder on the de-syndication of his favorite childhood TV show. Five years after he died, "Mr. Rogers" is getting evicted from the PBS neighborhood. Seven years have passed since new episodes were filmed.
