Everybody loves live prostate exams

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Actor Brad Garrett of "Everybody Loves Raymond" fame will share more than anyone cares to see tonight in order to raise cancer awareness. Garrett will bend over for a rectal prostate exam on live TV, as a part of the multi-network program "Stand Up For Cancer."

Movie producer Laura Ziskin — who worked on films such as "Pretty Woman," "As Good As It Gets" and the "Spider-Man" trilogy — is heading up the star-studded initiative and asked Garrett to participate in a humorous way. But Ziskin is keeping the details of what will be shown on-screen on the down low.

"I was honored to be asked to participate," Garrett said. "A prostate exam to heighten awareness and prevention was right up my alley. No pun intended."

NOTED. Baltimore health and fire officials have said that identifying the city's 10 most frequent 911 callers saved $18,000 in ambulance services.

The city linked the people with case managers who helped them get proper care without dialing 911. The program cut calls by 43 percent, and most of the patients reduced their calls to 911 by 80 percent.

QUOTED. "Yes, because of what I have growing in my back yard, my marijuana plants."

— A 46-year-old Illinois woman when asked if she knew why police officers were knocking on her door Monday afternoon. The woman, who had recently suffered a stroke, was growing 170 marijuana plants. She claimed to be growing the plants for medical use, but police still charged her because of the sheer quantity.
