Man of 8-inch sausage attack set free

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

The Sanger, Calif., man who was accused of breaking into a home, sprinkling one man with Pappy's seasoning, beating another with an 8-inch sausage and then stealing $900 was released from custody pending further investigation.

The sausage allegedly used by 21-year-old Antonio Vasquez Jr. was thrown aside and eaten by a dog before deputies arrived at the scene.

"After reviewing the report, we decided we just didn't have a case at this time," Assistant District Attorney John Savnoch said.

So Vasquez was released without charges filed.

The Arizona Daily Star's headline read, "Calif. sheriff's deputies never 'sausage' a residential burglary as this one."

NOTED. Pat "Deep Dish" Bertoletti, of Louisiana, has scarfed down grits at record speeds — 21 pounds in 10 minutes, to be exact. But he couldn't do it Saturday.

Bertoletti lost his Super Derby World Grits Eating Champion title to Tim "Eater X" Janus, who consumed only 13.9 pounds in 10 minutes.

There's always next year.

QUOTED. "I subsequently put it to former minister Brown late last night that there are too many reports of you in your underwear for me to ignore."

— New South Wales Premier Nathan Rees, speaking of Matt Brown, an Australian state government minister who was forced to quit his job after reports stated that he danced in his underwear at a parliamentary office party.

"It's very discouraging that people quoted didn't even recognize the heroes and victims of the 9/11 attacks. I am an '07 alum and lost two family members to the attacks who were members of the FDNY. Don't forget there are many people who gave and lost their lives on that day."
