Musical road receives mixed reviews

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A road in California that Honda paved to play the William Tell Overture when cars drive over it will be turned back into a normal road Tuesday. The grooves in the road, specifically designed to play music when Honda Civics drive over them at 55 miles per hour, were supposed to only get noticed by drivers. But nearby residents can hear the music from their houses, and it sounds like screeching.

"It will wake you up from a sound sleep," resident Brian Robin said. But some would be willing to stand it for the sake of history. "The way I look at it, there's only four in the world and one in the U.S., and it's right here by my home," said David Gilroy, a local carpenter.

NOTED. A 33-year-old Illinois woman just found out that bartending nude can lead to arrest.

Janet Brannon was arrested and charged with misdemeanor and public indecency. She was freed on $8,000 bond.

Sherriff's deputies in Delhi discovered her while doing a routine bar check this week, they said.

QUOTED. "Mission failed."

— Richard Anthony Smith, a 25-year-old man who said he rappelled into the Knoxville Museum of Art to diffuse and confiscate a Soviet-made nuclear warhead but then had to call police when he got stuck in an air conditioning duct.

He said he was a special agent from the United States Illuminati, badge number 0931. The bomb was in a blue plastic cow, he said.

"I wholeheartedly agree that the University should be accommodating to students who need the extra time. I feel that existing Carolina students ought to have some priority over high schoolers who only might become Carolina students. Shoving seniors out the door just to cram in the next batch has a lot of potential to harm Carolina's culture of exploration and learning."
