DAILY DOSE

Man uses stolen cash to pay court fine

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

If you're going to pay a court fine, you shouldn't use the marked bills from your latest robbery.

A California man lifted about $8,000 worth of dollar bills from a local restaurant called The Homestead in the desert town Inyokern. The restaurant had a tradition of customers hanging dollar bills on its walls after writing messages and drawing distinguishing details on them.

The man used 10 of the bills, some of which actually had the word "Homestead" written on them, to pay a court fine. A clerk immediately recognized the bills. About $1,000 worth of the bills have been recovered from various banks since the robbery.

NOTED. A 55-year-old Tampa, Fla., man was arrested Sunday after calling 911 every time he needed a ride to the drugstore — 50 times in September.

Tampa police said the man's constant calls for medical services have endangered public safety by distracting paramedics from real sicknesses and injuries. The man is being held in jail in lieu of $500 bail.

QUOTED. "The doctors said, 'We found something in your pelvic area that doesn't look right and you need to have it checked out right away.'"

— a 38-year-old Gold Coast woman whose life may have been saved by being mugged, hit in the head and shot in the leg. After the attack, doctors gave the woman a routine CT scan and discovered she had advanced ovarian cancer.
