UNC performance gets surprise actor

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A UNC student made a dramatic debut by stepping onto the stage during a PlayMakers Repertory Company performance of Shakespeare's Pericles on Wednesday night at the Paul Green Theatre.

"At first you were kind of like, is he part of the play?" said junior Sara Fender, who attended the play. "But he was decked out in Carolina football gear while everyone else was in Victorian-style costumes."

Witnesses said the man spotted an actor dressed in robes and began begging forgiveness from him.

The play resumed after about 10 minutes. The actor's first line after the disruption was, "Let none disturb us." The play concluded with a standing ovation.

NOTED. After Japanese parents told their 36-year-old comic book-obsessed daughter to clean out her room so her sister also could move in, she went online to hire a hitman to kill them.

The woman — who is unemployed and still lives at home — has filled up three rooms with several thousand comic books and videotapes she has collected using an allowance from her grandmother.

QUOTED. "We lost about 1,000 gallons of gas and about $3,500. But I don't feel too bad because the people looked so happy when they were buying gas. If I can do this for them, that's all right."

— Mimi Zidan, a Pekin, Ill., gas station owner who looked to the bright side after an attendant accidentally set the price of gasoline to 35 cents per gallon.
