Blondes don't always have more fun

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Connecticut blonde tried to sue L'Oreal Inc. after she accidentally dyed her hair brown. The woman claimed it ruined her social life. The judge dismissed the case, even though the woman said the shock has her on antidepressants.

"I was mentally and physically in shock," Charlotte Feeney states in court documents. "I was sick to my stomach, I had headaches, I don't like myself, I stay home more than ever in my life, I wear hats most of the time."

She also said that she misses the attention and that the "naturally blonde" hair she was attempting to dye will never be the same hue again.

She should have first done a strand test like the package suggests, L'Oreal stated.

NOTED. A tailgater skinny dipping in a truck bed before the University of Massachusetts football game against the University of Delaware was charged with assault for kneeling an officer in the groin.

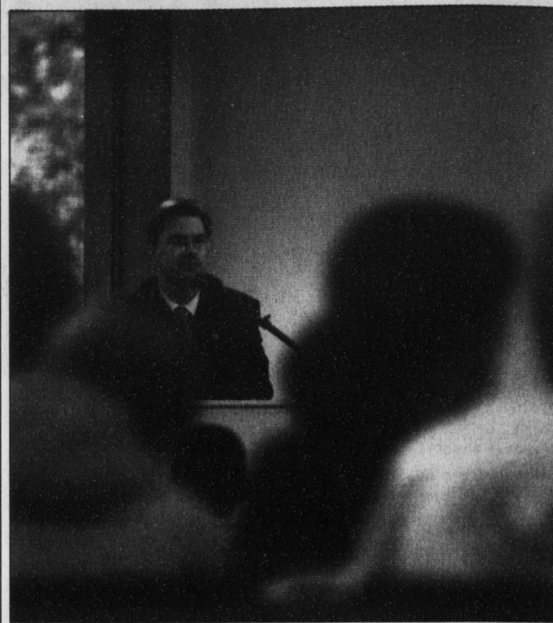

The tailgater refused to stop splashing around. The 21-year-old was charged with assault and battery on a police officer, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct.

QUOTED. "There's always that one problem stray. And of course, it got me."

— Cory Davis, 56, of Washington, who was shot by her heating stove after a shotgun shell was left in there, somehow wrapped in the newspaper she used to light it.

"I kept thinking, 'geeze that was one fast hot coal flying at me,'" she said. "But it wasn't a coal."

ASKED AND ANSWERED

DTH/ANDREW JOHNSON

Chancellor Holden Thorp answers students' questions at an open house Wednesday on the second floor of the Student Union. Topics ranged from enrollment growth to environmental sustainability to the availability of space for dance groups. See pg. 3 for the full story.

POLICE LOG

■ Someone entered an unlocked car on Sweeten Creek Road and also siphoned $12 in gasoline from the car's tank between late Monday and Tuesday morning, according to Chapel Hill police reports.

■ Someone stole more than $12,000 from a car parked in an Elliott Road parking lot, according to Chapel Hill police reports. Among the items stolen Tuesday from the 2003 Nissan was a $11,000 platinum diamond ring, reports state.

■ Police received reports Tuesday of someone writing a racial slur on the wall of a bathroom stall in the Chapel Hill Public Library, according to Chapel Hill police reports.

■ Someone reported a suspicious person Monday, stating that a man walked two bikes down Willow Drive, according to Chapel Hill police reports.

■ Police arrested a man for possession of marijuana after stopping him for speeding Tuesday night, according to Carrboro police reports.

Julandus Answan Foushee, 21, told the officer that he had just smoked marijuana before getting in the car, reports state.

Police found a small bag of marijuana in his pocket upon searching, reports state. A K-9, Ali, sniffed the car and helped officers locate marijuana residue and a white powder residue, along with a digital scale, according to reports. The car had an "overwhelming odor of air freshener," reports state.

■ Police received a call in regards to a deer running around in a circle next to a building on Jones Ferry Road, according to Carrboro police reports.

The responding officer chased the deer into the woods Tuesday, reports state.
