

ELZY'S OUT, TOO

DTH FILE/ANTHONY HARRIS

Fullback Anthony Elzy became the third Tar Heel offensive starter in recent weeks to see a serious injury sideline him for an extended period of time. Elzy's fractured shoulder blade will bench him for at least six weeks. "Now somebody else has to step up," coach Butch Davis said.

SCOUTING REPORT

UNC must exploit QB inconsistency

BY POWELL LATIMER
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

More than most teams, Boston College comes and goes with its quarterback.

The consistency of junior signal-caller Chris Crane — or lack thereof — could very well be the story of Saturday's matchup.

From game to game, it's uncertain which version of Crane will show up to play — the one who has thrown multiple interceptions on three separate occasions, or the one who has accounted for 12 total touchdowns.

UNC is preparing for the latter. "This kid's playing really well," coach Butch Davis said of Crane. "They throw the ball well; they know what they're doing."

Crane has five passing scores, but most of his production comes from his feet, where the junior has found paydirt seven times to lead

BC in rushing touchdowns.

Crane and his hulking 6-foot-4-inch, 239-lb. frame provide the Eagles' offense with another dimension in the red zone, an area where UNC showed vulnerability against Virginia.

But that's assuming Crane can lead the Eagles there, despite his propensity for throwing picks. In BC's victory against Virginia Tech last week, Crane threw three interceptions — part of five total turnovers by BC.

"I don't know how they did it with five turnovers," UNC quarterback Cameron Sexton said. "It's difficult to win with turnovers, and we feel like that's a key to a game."

The Tar Heel defense must be licking its chops in watching tape of the strong, but sometimes inaccurate, arm of Crane.

For the season, Crane has thrown nine picks in six games.

Compare that even to Sexton's stat line in 2006, when he played in only seven games and still only threw eight picks.

DTH FILE/DAVID ENARSON

The Tar Heel defense and secondary will have to step up for Boston College quarterback Chris Crane, as they did against Notre Dame earlier this month.

One thing that has hampered Crane more than most is pressure from opposing defenses. VT brought pressure all night last week, and Crane couldn't get comfortable.

But pressure is one thing UNC has struggled to create all season. Even against pass-happy Notre Dame, UNC only brought blitzes in the second half.

With or without the pressure, Crane's stats still do not stack up well against North Carolina's secondary. The Tar Heels lead the nation in interceptions, and ball-hawking safety Trimane Goddard has four himself.

The UNC secondary will be looking for some balls to snatch, especially after not corralling any picks last week against Virginia.

While Boston College is a strong team overall, UNC has an ideal defense to strike at the Eagles' Achilles' heel.

thank you

Both The Daily Grind and The Global Cup compost their coffee grounds, straws, cups, and napkins to used in the soil of local farmers. Our office is proud to help by providing bins in support of this great composting program. Matzah Rising Farm in Carrboro, NC is one farm benefitting from your beans! They write: "When you order a drink from the Global Cup, your beans haven't just sacrificed their lives for your drinking pleasure. They're truly the gift that keeps on giving!" Thank you to everyone who help to support The Daily Grind and The Global Cup!

recent events

Student Move-In this year accounted for 23.24 tons of cardboard- 5 tons more than last year! We also had 3 tons more trash. Our overall recycling rate for student move-in was a very impressive 50.83%. That is up from 35% in 2006. Keep it up!

FallFest recycling has typically ranged from 46% recycling to 56%. This year it was about average at 50%. Overall the amount of street debris and food waste was considerably less than in previous years. Great work everyone!

The Carolina Block Party was a great success! Event organizers worked with OWRR to set up recycling- efforts which were rewarded with a 60% recycling rate. This is excellent and we look forward to building on this success in the years to come.
