Woman grows dreads to almost 9 feet

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Fla. woman now has dreadlocks that are longer than she is tall. They measure 8 feet 9 inches, and it takes a full bottle of shampoo and a full bottle of conditioner to wash them each time.

So Asha Mandela can't wash it three times a week anymore. "Now I do it once a week," she said. "It's very tiring. Sometimes I don't have the energy."

The Miami resident has submitted her hair to the Guinness Book of World Records for the Longest Dreadlocks, and it will be the first entry in a new category.

After 20 years of growing her hair, her efforts may finally gain worldwide recognition.

NOTED. An Ohio woman gave birth to triplets — babies who are actually her granddaughters.

Jaci Dalenberg, 56, was carrying the babies as a surrogate for her daughter, Kim Coseno. They were more than two months premature and each weighed less than three pounds.

Coseno's mother offered herself as a surrogate while her daughter was waiting to adopt.

QUOTED. "Very bad luck."

— Meteorologist Fernando Torenna describing a single lightning strike that killed 52 cows in Uruguay.

The cows had pressed against a wire fence for protection during a storm.

A photograph shows the black and brown cows lying dead in a row along the fence.

Torenna said he wasn't surprised.

"If graphic pictures were used to discourage the inhumane treatment of animals, or the genocide in Darfur, would such a display be worthy of condemnation, or praise? I have often heard that as a prerequisite to consuming meat, people should see how the animals that they will eat are treated and killed. Is this not applicable to abortion?"
