Best of the blogs: About 100 DTH journalists post updates during the day on what local voters are doing and saying

SNAPSHOT FROM THE DAY

6:46 a.m. — Election Day 2008 blog is officially launched and linked to DailyTarHeel.com.

9:41 a.m. — The New York Times publishes an interactive graphic showing their predictions on how the country will vote. North Carolina is listed as a toss-up. 10:33 a.m. — Michelle Obama sends a personal e-mail message to millions of her husband's supporters.

1:10 p.m. — An Elon University poll found that North Carolinians are frustrated with negative campaigns.

1:48 p.m. — UNC senior Carrie Hagan is in Salisbury campaigning for her mother, Kay Hagan.

2:15 p.m. — Democratic guberna-torial candidate Lt. Gov. Bev Perdue stops in Charlotte.

2:23 p.m. — There are few lines at several Orange County polling sites. 2:24 p.m. — Presidential candidates John McCain and Barack Obama cast their votes probably for

2:48 p.m. — There are a few voting glitches in the Triangle area as voting was delayed at some polling sites for about a half-hour.

3:47 p.m. — A Carrboro mother tells a reporter her family's priorities are "Obama and Tar Heel basketball." 3:56 p.m. — CNN reports that there have been several attempts across the country to misinform potential voters by telling them to vote Wednesday. 4:37 p.m. — More than 3 million Facebook users say they have voted.

OVERHEARD ON CAMPUS

"It's surreal, because you've been hearing this for two years. We've invested a lot of tension and hopes in this. And I just really hope it goes

- Rachel Puckett, sophomore, international studies

"By picking Jesus Christ, I can be sure that he's in control. I'm not limiting my vote to a particular candidate, but I'm putting my hope and my trust in something larger."

- Scott Seibold, senior, communication studies, who wrote in Jesus Christ for president

"I voted early at Duke University, and my brother came with me who was wearing a UNC shirt. Some guy came up to him — and let's just say he wasn't very nice." — Katie Moore, first-year, geology

"It's really here! Because it feels like we've just been immersed in this pop culture that is the election."

 Eliza Cohen, junior, French 'I'm against people voting who don't know anything about the issues. I have a lot of friends like that. I based my decision on what's been happening in the past eight years.

Without that I think it would have been a more difficult decision, but it was easy for me."

- Laura Koehler, sophomore, premed and psychology

OVERHEARD AT THE POLLS

"I'm sure that in the state of North Carolina there's going to be lots of people who think they voted for the president, but didn't."

- Laurence Kirsch, Chapel Hill

"It's our future. For a lot of the people whose voices can't be heard, you have to be their voice. A lot of people who can't vote, or are too busy working to make it to the polls—they need a voice, and we are that voice."

- Bolou Adeyeye, sophomore

"I do not understand the Electoral College, but I'd like to think my vote matters. I still think we have a lot of problems in the system that we have, as far as democracy goes."

Benjamin Mickey, junior

"I don't really think it'll make a difference, but it'll make me feel bet-ter, so at least I tried. Either way, it'll give you the peace of mind to know that you went out and exercised your right that people have gone overseas and died for."

- Nick Wilson, first-year
