

County could adopt goals to ensure justice

Identifies 5 types of social justice

BY JOE WOODRUFF
STAFF WRITER

The Orange County Board of Commissioners will consider becoming one of the first in the nation to adopt a set of guidelines ensuring fairness consideration in decisions.

The board will review the final draft of a proposed social justice goal at its meeting tonight.

The five page report, written by the Orange County Human Relations Commission, is intended to formalize the principles that the board aims to uphold.

"These principles need to be highlighted and celebrated," Chairman Barry Jacobs said.

The document divides social justice into six categories that the board should consider: elimination of oppression, economic self-sufficiency, safe communities, environmental justice, civic participation and other.

It also includes specific recommendations for promoting social justice, including extending county civil rights ordinances to protect people against discrimination based on sexual orientation and expanding public transportation.

Currently there are no articulated standards for ensuring justice in board decisions. The guidelines will serve as a measuring stick to which the public can hold commissioners accountable.

If the social justice goal is adopted, Orange County would be one of few in the nation with a set of fixed social justice guidelines.

"We would certainly be the first county in North Carolina to have social justice goals," Commissioner Mike Nelson said.

The board first asked the Human Relations Commission to formulate the goal in 2004. A first draft was presented to the board at a February work session.

The county manager recommended that the goal be adopted in spring of 2009, said Shoshannah Smith, director of Human Rights and Relations for the county.

Aspects of the goal have already been considered by the board as part of the process for locating a proposed waste transfer station in Orange County.

In March 2007, the board decided to place the transfer station at the location of the current landfill, at Eubanks Road.

After opposition from residents of the mostly black community, where the landfill has been located since 1972, the commissioners reopened the search in Nov. 2007.

In September of this year, the board adopted environmental justice as one of its criteria in the search for the waste transfer site.

Stan Cheren, communications chair of the Rogers-Eubanks Coalition to End Environmental Racism, said a set of social justice guidelines would have done little to benefit the community residents.

"I don't think it would have had a major difference," he said.

But others said fixed social justice criteria would have saved residents great amounts of trouble.

"I think that that's an excellent thing," said Yonni Chapman, of the coalition and local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "It changes the culture in that social justice is recognized as a community concern."

"If they had been in place, it would have meant the original decision to site the waste transfer station would never have happened."

SCOUTING REPORT

Johnson's offense a challenge for Heels

BY RACHEL ULLRICH
SPORTS EDITOR

A look at this season's stat line tells you about all you need to know about Georgia Tech coach Paul Johnson's Yellow Jackets.

First downs: 146. Of those, 102 rushing. Offensive yards: 3,159. Those were 2,181 rushing.

Not to mention 22 of 28 touchdowns — rushing.

Johnson is known for his attacks on the ground and a talented option offense, and UNC coach Butch Davis knows he'll see a run offense and then some this weekend.

"Georgia Tech is more dangerous than a traditional wishbone team," Davis said, noting that Tech uses two wide receivers on top of the three rushers in the backfield.

"With what Georgia Tech's doing, they have two guys in the slot that are in a dangerous position to get out for passes.

"You're always very susceptible to the play-action pass."

Johnson has become famous for his triple-option wishbone, a rush offense that has led his teams to No. 1 in the FBS in rushing for three straight years, 2005-07.

Johnson's former team, the United States Naval Academy, is still atop the nation, thanks to a new head coach who had been ingrained in his system.

And it didn't take Johnson long to crack the Top 10 with Georgia Tech as well, currently at No. 8.

"Georgia Tech is a very, very good football team," Davis said. "Paul's done a great job with the team."

Johnson's three-back system means his backs are also blockers.

"Marcus (Wright) had a nice run on Saturday, but the thing that impressed me the most was his blocking," Johnson said. "He they're expecting.

"If you're conscious of it, then you are trying to get the ball out," he said. "Those are good turnovers. To me, any turnover is a good turnover, but all three of those against Florida State were forced."

Against the Seminoles, Johnson's Georgia Tech defense recovered three turnovers and his offense scored 21 points in less than five minutes en route to a 31-28 win — a game in which Tech's two quarterbacks attempted six total passes.

Johnson's rushers, meanwhile, were grabbing 36-, 23- and 66-yard runs.

"With this offense, you better be disciplined," Davis said. "You gotta read their keys, gotta know exactly what your responsibilities are, because they will make you pay big time."

Davis said the team used the off-week to learn Johnson's unusual wishbone offense and to get ready to learn how to exploit it.

If he and his staff can succeed, they will have a much better shot at stopping any of the options Johnson throws at them.
