Parents pick Obama names for babies

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Florida couple was the first to pick Obama's name for their child — they named him Sanjae Obama Fisher at 8 p.m. Election Day, before most news outlets had declared him the president-elect.

In Arkansas, Benjamin Barack Kimbrough was born at 2:35 p.m. Central time on Election Day. His father, Walter Kimbrough, is president of a historically black school in Little Rock.

And in Maryland, a mother went into labor Tuesday after voting for Obama and named her daughter Sasha Malia Ann Taylor, after the Obamas' two girls, Sasha, 7, and Malia, 10.

The mother watched Obama's victory speech while she was in the hospital.

NOTED. A Washington state retiree bought 10,000 copies Wednesday of The Bellingham Herald's day-after-election edition, which has the headline "Obama wins."

They cost him $1,700, but the 67-year-old thinks he could make a net profit someday if the papers become a collector's item.

The paper still had the plates for the publication when the man called in his special order.

QUOTED. "The threats and all — that's the part that makes you wish it never happened." — Contractor Bob Kitts, who found $182,000 in Depression-era currency hidden in a bathroom wall.

He only got to keep a few thousand, because nobody could figure out how to split the money or who it rightfully belonged to. But to hold all that money made it worthwhile, he said.

"Carolina Students for Life, this is unacceptable. ... If you want to know what the Carolina student body actually believes, then you will not precede the question and answer session with a pro-life speaker. This will CLEARLY lead to a biased audience. If you have an agenda, be honest about it."
