DAILY PROGRESS.

Liberal arrangements made with yearly advertisers.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV. 10, 1858.

[SELECTED FOR THE "DAILY PROGRESS."] From the New York Journal of Commerce, KENIL WORTH CASTLE.

"But these stones, these old gate-ways, these mounds, what power have they to send the soul back through ages of time, and stir it up from its very bottom! I would, if I could, come and sit in this court at evening. Then should I not see flitting to please, a liberal share of the public patronage is confidently solicited.

shadows and forms, and hear low arry voices?"

[Beecher's Star Paper Beecher's Star Papers.

Old Kenilworth! thy stately ruin stands, A proud memorial of the days gone by,-Days when the sceptre swayed by potent hands, O er ruled the fate of foe or votary! Days when anabition like a polar star, Guided the statesman through a sea of strife,

When months of peace gave place to years of war, And crown'd caprice made sport with human life! Hath numbered ages with a pen of mould, Have seen strange deeds when in their glorious prime.

And deeds which Doom's great book alone doth hold! Here rebel subjects have defied their king,-And here the prisoner bath in bonds remained,-And here the bandit hordes have dared to bring, The treasure which their bloody toils have gained !

Here mighty chiefs in times long buried, reared A wall or turret to record their fame !-Here heroes fought whose strength a nation feared, For storm and seige are blended with thy name! And here, when gentler seasons blessed the land, Albion's fair daughters have rejoiced to see

Some crested knight receive from beauty's hand The well-won prize in games of chivalry. But Mortimer! as if thy bold career Might fail to send thy memory through time, Thou too must raise a lordly structure here, On which to stamp the escutcheons of thy line!

And here, to make thyself more deeply vile, Thou did'st hold revels while rebellion reigned, For in the dungeons of this giant pile, A monarch languished whom thy reason chained!

But gliding slowly down through centuries, Behold the greatness which a Leicester plann'd; For thou, with all thy teeming memories Did'st gain new splendor from his powerful hand! Here fairest gardens flourished, and the sound Of bubbling fountains filled the fragrant air,-And herds of deer were in the woodland found,

For wealth and beauty triumphed everywhere! Tis Summer evening,-and the twilight shade Is gently deep'ning on thy massive towers. But hark !- a sound issuing from the glade, Mingled with periumes from the garden bowers,-A maiden queen, with all her glittering train, Passes a bridge no foot hath pressed before, And here, oh! Kenilworth, will she remain,

To feast where kings held revelry of yore. But the scene changes with revolving years, And thy proud head in low submission brings, And dust, and mould, in saddening characters, Recall the fate of earth's most glorious things! And now the traveler comes at even tide. To muse in silence o'er thy crumbling stones, Where voices whisper, and where shadows glide, And the low wind thy desolation means.

ANNIE GRENVILLE. Brooklyn, October, 28, 1858.

North Carolina.

THE SANDSTONE OF NORTH CAROLINA .- The old North State has long been known to be rich in her minerals; but the development of these natural resources is due, in a great measure. to the exemplary efforts of Professor Emmons, the talented State geologist and mineralogist. At the highly recommended, and the effect of its use in building, we are pleased to see, has been well il-REFERENCES.-Hon, John W. RAIN.-We have had several copious and most refreshing rains. The thirsty earth drank up the pearly drops with an avidity that seemed almost insatiable. It was very much needed. The wells were becoming dry, scarcely yielding the supply necessary to the comfort and health of man and beast. But the rain has continued to fall from day to day, now a little and then a little, and at other times in torrents, until the water-courses give evidence of the presence of that pure element so necessary to the comfort, the happiness, the life of all created things. Let us be thankful.- Hadesboro Argus.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT HIMSELF -Mr. James P. Newton, overseer for Hon. A. W. Venable, of Granville, N C., accidentally shot himself on I and Card Board, at ALLEN'S Card Depot, learn from the Tobacco Plant, that the whole load lodged in Mr. Newton's right side, tearing it with his liver, away. He survived but six hours. Deceased leaves a wife and six children.

HIGH PRICES .- Fourteen negroes were sold for cash at Leasburg, N. C., on Monday last by E. B. Holden, auctioneer, for the aggregate sum of $10, Cards; 500 doz. Firemen's, Military and Civic Ball Cards; 500 doz. Orders of Dancing, all sizes, plain 600. Two of them were children not six months girl 8 years old brought $1,014; and one at 7 and another 5 years of age, pushed these figures.
