Christmas is Coming.

BY AN ORPHAN.

Christmas is coming, cries the child, and her weet face is covered with smiles as she thinks of the never failing toys, that accompanies it.

Christmas is coming, cries the school by, as he packs up the old dusty school books, may be for to please, a liberal share of the public patronage is the last time, before the holidays, he forgets his spelling book, his grammar, his arithmetic, yea, the very licking his schoolmaster gave him in the DOWAN HOUSE .- By H. L. Robards, contemplation of this all absorbing subject.

Christmas is coming, says the student to his chum, and you can see their eyes brighten, their chest expanding, their gait quickening at the thought of the parties they are to attend, the ladies they are going to see, the "sweethearts" they are going to get, for of course everybody is going to fall in love with them or their moustaches.

Christmas is coming, says the business mati, and he feels renewed strength at the idea of leaving his dusty ledgers and spending the holidays in the bosom of his family. For them he has Stage Office in Salisbury, and that is kept at the toiled all the year, for them he has sacrificed his dearest wishes, for he has worked day and night, and now, as he thinks of the days he is going to spend in their company, free of care, free of the anxiety business is sure to bring, he feels that the coming Christmas days will indeed be holy days for him.

Christmas is coming, mumbles the old grandsending in secret, presents, his sweetheart should The house is admirably located, especially for never know who sent, but who would always be business men, being on Courtland Street, only a few | sure to thank him for the very secretness with doors from Broadway, in the immediate vicinity o which they came, he thinks of his manhood's the Southern Railroad and Steamboat Stations. WINCHESTER, Christmas he so much enjoyed long ago Christmas he so much enjoyed long ago Christmas is coming, cries rich and poor, young and old, and they all seem to be happy at the thought, but the suniest picture has always a shade, and this alas, has one also. . Christmas is coming, utters the friendless orphan, and the tears comes into his eyes as he thinks of the Christmas he used to spend, in his once happy home. Since then he has seen the dearest beings he had on earth die and laid in the grave, since then he has seen the friend he valued most, the man for whose fidelity he thought he could pledge his very life fall from him, in need, and may be betray him, since then he has seen his dearest wishes sacrificed and thrown to the winds, in fact, no Christmas day has dawned for him that did not bring its sorrow, no thing that he truly loved but withered, and died, or may be flew from him, and now when he thinks of the coming Christmas, he feels that for him there is no Christmas, no home to go to. no being on earth that cares how his Christmas is spent, whether he enjoys himself or not, he feels that he is fortune's football, to be kicked around the world, till he dies, and then to be buried as a stranger in his own native land. Kind reader, have I overdrawn the picture, it may be only me that has suffered what I have described, heaven grant it may be so, but if there is one particle of truth in what I have here said, if there is an orphan among you, cheer him, help Will furnish Designs and Specifications for, and su- him, one kind word, nay a kind smile, extended perintend Town Houses, Cottages, Villas, Stores, to him may fall like oil on troubled waters, may Churches, Public Buildings; also for constructions make him think that if he cannot enjoy Christmas with his loved ones on earth, he may at least, or Iron, and all buildings required at Stations.
