I have recently added to my Cotton Gins C. Mc-Linden's Improvement on Cotton Gin Boxes, by which a Gin will pick about one-third more cotton in a day, and improves the quality of the cotton from is to je, per pound over any gin not using this im-provement. It picks the seed cleaner and prevents any cotton from clogging on the saws. This improve-ment consists in plunging the heads of the Cotton Box six inches from where the saws pass through the risks in a direct like outward, deflecting from this ine in an angle of about fifteen degrees, causing the outon as it passes apward to contract and expand young downward, thus shifting the cotton so as to present a different surface to the saws each time.
