

The President and the Politicians.

The sagacity and patriotism of the President have never received a more decided exemplification than was evinced by his reply on Thursday to a delegation of Republicans from Arkansas...

It has been alleged by the Democratic press and by certain Republican papers that since his inauguration the President has sought to impose upon the people officials who had been appointed because of their personal fitness to him...

If, as often happens, an opposition is made to these selections, it is in the nature of things futile to expect that the Chief Magistrate should thoroughly examine both sides of the question...

The noblest motive by which the President that he has "any personal feeling" in the confirmation of appointments whose propriety or popularity is contested is indubitable evidence of his thorough appreciation of republican institutions...

Certain well meaning Republican journals in other States would do themselves and their readers a kindness by endeavoring to get something like a correct idea of Missouri politics.

The Missouri anti-Grant Republicans, who hold the balance of power in that State, have called a national anti-Grant or Liberal Republican Convention...

While the lamp holds out to burn the vilest slanders may be hurled upon it, but in advance of this Cincinnati New Party Convention there will be two others...

no delegate Convention, but simply a mass meeting, with every effort made to swell the assemblage.—St. Louis Democrat.

A Blast from Jubal.

For an arrant, blatant, traitorous demagogue, commend us to Jubal Early. This man was, indeed, a soldier on the Confederate side during the rebellion...

It is to be feared that Jubal had among his auditors some shallow-headed women who will follow his advice, and teach their children to look upon the lost cause as one not altogether lost beyond redemption...

The Anti-Grant Republican Convention and Other Presidential Movements.

The Missouri anti-Grant Republicans, who hold the balance of power in that State, have called a national anti-Grant or Liberal Republican Convention...

But this view of the question is the contracted view of the mere spoliator, and does not cover the ground; and yet outside of Missouri, we suspect, there are very few anti-Grant Republicans who are not disappointed office-seekers...

From present appearances, however, the Cincinnati Convention will be a fizzle, like the Independent Convention of 1844, and the Cleveland Anti-Lincoln Republican Convention of 1848...

While the lamp holds out to burn the vilest slanders may be hurled upon it, but in advance of this Cincinnati New Party Convention there will be two others...

Nothing has been heard of any of the escaped parties. The Greenbacker Patriot learns that one of the prisoners confined in the jail at Lexington was shot to death on last Tuesday night...

JUDGE HUGH L. BOND.—The New Era, published at Spartanburg, S. C., says:—Judge Bond, came to this State under a great pressure of prejudice, but those who attentively watched the proceedings of the late Circuit Court at Columbia must admit that Justice has been largely tempered with mercy...

SAW HIM.—The Local of The Wilmington Journal says: "We had the distinguished honor of seeing, on Tuesday last, Maj. Gen. Henry Berry Lowery, Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Scuppernon Outlaws, who was at Moss Neck, on Tuesday, as the train passed there going up. We were on the train, and hearing that the outlaw was at the depot, we got a view of him just as the train was moving off. A Lonely Wife.

Come home, dear husband, why do you not come. From Raleigh, the city so gay; The farm is neglected, we need you at home, Come home, with your wife to stay.

Remember, my darling, the people are poor, Come home, forever to stay.

Dear, when you were stumping, you said it was a fact, The State had been robbed of its life, But if you were elected, you'd lesson the tax.

Remember, when speaking you blew a loud horn About robbery, corruption and fraud; You promised the people to retrace and reform, But how is it now, my lord?

Dear husband, my love, I wish that you would, Around your own household rally; Your staying in Raleigh will do you no good, Deceived by the girls in the gallery.

Dear, when at home, at the table with me, Your habits were good, and your heart seemed true; But since in Raleigh you have been on a spree— You have disgraced me, but I have not you.

Dear husband, dear husband, we'll welcome you home, Receive you with kisses, altho' you are wild; Since you have been absent, a baby was born; Come home, my darling, we'll name our child.

Dear husband, dear husband, don't write me no more, The nights seem lonely and long; I am sorry to think that you have treated me so, In Raleigh with girls going around.
