The most remarkable thing connected with the storm was the rapid fall of temperature. At 1:45 the thermometer registered 97 degrees, and the truthfulness of its record was not doubted in the least. And yet, by steady decline, the mercury in that same thermometer was all below the 69-degree mark just fifteen minutes later. It then began to rise, and at 4 o'clock told the observer that 80 degrees was the correct measure of the heat. At 8 o'clock p. m. the temperature was 76 degrees. These sudden changes came without warning, except that a short time before the storm broke some ordinary thunderheads were seen in the northwest, from which quarter the wind continued to The rainfall was insignificantblow. The reonly .22 inch.
