BOOM PROVES A BOOMERANG Soft Coal Operators Not to Profit by the

Strike in Anthracite Region Altoona, Pa., Sept. 24.—The problem

confronting the operators of the bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania is whether they will be able, after all, to enjoy the business boom resulting from the shut down of the greater part of the anthracite region.

While there is no longer, or at least not at this time any danger of a sympathetic strike in the soft coal regions, the operators have been made plainly to understand that the bituminous miners propose to stand by their striking brethren to, the extent of refusing to load cars destined for a market created as a result of the strike. They will not be parties to any plan which will result in the supplanting of the anthracite product by the bituminous. The result of this is likely to be a curtailment for the soft coal operators. rather than an increase. The situation is thus described by a Philadelphia operator who has just made a tour of his mines in this and surrounding counties:
