a remembrance of the old veterans of the Confederate Army and the parade of the boys who wore the gray will be of much interest. Some of the Confederate banners will be used in the procession and more than one of the brave soldier boys will have on some piece of uniform that saw service in the war. This parade and soldiers' day will be an occasion long to be remembered. Prominent officers of the Confederate Army will deliver addresses through the day.

SOME INTERESTING NOTES

Recent Entries and Preparations for the State Fair

One of the greatest novelties at the fair will be the horseless carriage. This will be exhibited by the Mobile Company of America. There will be an opportunity to ride in it around the track and enjoy a new sensation.

The beautiful Welch ponies entered for the fair were imported into this country by Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania. The children will enjoy this sight. There are seven in all of these exquisite animals.

The farmers called in numbers for premium lists this week, showing that they are fully aroused to the advantages offered to them through the aid of the State Agricultural Department, the board of which has that staunch friend of the fair, Colonel John S. Cunningham as its president.

The mailing agents report that everything is coming. They start again tomorrow on new routes to bill the fair thoroughly.

The North Carolina school of deaf and dumb will make an exhibit which will be a revelation to the people of the State of the fine work in the industrial and art departments.

There were 48 entries in art, water color, pastel, crayon, pencil and pen and ink drawings yesterday.

The new fence at the fair grounds runs a hundred feet to the east, northward at the grounds. The carriage gate is changed to the southeast corner for convenience, and the south front of floral hall will be open for pedestrians.

A bureau of information will be kept open, without charge, to inform strangers and others where accommodations in the city may be had, and the price. Send notice thereof to the State Fair office, northwest corner of Pullen Building, northeast floor.
