

FORESTRY AT BUFFALO Forecast of the Splendid Exhibit Planned for the Pan-American Exposition

Forestry will receive special attention at the Pan-American Exposition to be held in Buffalo next year. The exhibit will contain much that is interesting and beneficial to the general public, a description of which will be given upon which the Exposition is founded.

The propagation, care and preservation of forests has received the greatest deal of attention from the United States government of late years. The United States division of forestry under Gifford Pinchot has made an unusually generous offer to all farmers of part wood lots.

Particular attention will be given to the treeless regions of Kansas. Farmers throughout that section recognize the value of wood lots as a source of supply for fence posts and fuel, as well as the benefits of protection from storms while his affords by tree belts, when grown for wind breaks.

The necessity has been brought home to them by depredations, accentuated in many cases by having once lived in one of the Eastern States, when, in their younger days, the timber was considered a nuisance to be gotten rid of with the least possible delay and expense. They do not, however, appreciate the scientific advantages to the country at large of proper forest culture, which results in protection against fire, in spring and droughts in summer, in the soil, and in the broad question of forest preservation, embracing the great national benefit to be derived from the forest, which in turn will provide a regular, copious rainfall.

Distribution of moisture will be made plain, as the work is done in the great chemical laboratory of nature. How the wet surface of leaves operates as an air-tight covering to prevent undue evaporation, while the myriads of tiny rootlets take up the water as it slowly percolates through this covering into the soil, forcing it up through the trunk and branches to the leaves, where it is given off in the form of vapor through transpiration, and is once more precipitated to the earth in the shower or dew that waters the growing crop.

The great importance of forest preservation in the United States is not appreciated by the general public. That the sentiment is growing is exemplified in the creation of forestry departments in our great universities.

For more than a century the natural forests have been cut and destroyed until in many parts of the country the people are brought face to face with one of the greatest problems that ever confronted them. This problem in its engineering involves not only the supply of building material, pulp wood for the manufacture of the largest amount of paper required by any country and the millions of other articles, but also the soil fertility, upon which depends both individual and national existence.
