

Wayne Cotton Growers Hold a Good Meeting

Fixing the Docket for Next Term of Court—Street Improvement—Sunday School People Out in Force

Goldboro, N. C., Aug. 30.—Special.—The Wayne County Cotton Growers' Association met today at noon in the court house pursuant to a call from the county chairman, who, on assuming the chair, announced that the object of the meeting was to elect delegates to the State Cotton Growers' Association, which meets in the city of Raleigh on the 29th of September. After a few remarks by members of the county organization who were present the following delegates were elected: Messrs. George W. Best, J. L. Wood, A. T. Uzzell, J. M. Edgerton, J. S. Davis, J. A. Stevens, and N. W. Musgrave. As can be seen from the list the delegates are composed of the leading farmers of the county. The Wayne county branch of the association was organized about one year ago for the purpose of protecting their interests against the encroachments of the cotton seed oil trust. It is expected that the meeting in Raleigh will take radical steps in that direction.

on which he was arrested. The killing occurred about two months ago. The only eye-witness to the tragedy is a small negro boy about 6 years old. After Frank Winn had been placed in jail his counsel began habeas corpus proceedings which were heard before Judge Robinson at Chambers, and Winn was allowed to give a heavy bond for his appearance at the coming term of Superior court. He gave bond and is living on his farm near Mt. Olive.

Chinatown's Newspaper

Amusing Extracts from a Modern Sheet Published by Celestials

From the New York Evening Post

Weeks after the American correspondents had described the entry of the white troops into the Forbidden City of Peking, they drifted into the Chinatown of this city, and the printed news which not only described but illustrated graphically and with much boldness of detail an overwhelming victory for the Boxers and the utter annihilation of the European armies. Leaders from home continued the news as far as Cantonese peasants could speak authoritatively of an event at Peking. After that, the Chinamen lapsed with amused toleration to the accounts of the Empress Dowager's flight and the rescue of the envoys. That they listened at all, it should be said, was a sign that an appetite for some sort of news had been awakened in the usually stolid Oriental. There are perhaps thirty Chinamen in New York who speak English with any fluency, and they would translate the day's dispatches to knots of their countrymen. Some here were who held that, after all, the "Mellon" papers might be right and the colored woodcut wrong, but they were laughed down.

up a pencil-like brush and, sighting along it as though it was a rifle, began to write. When a Caucasian wishes to make characters with exceptional neatness he takes his pencil as close to the point as he can. The Chinaman grasps it as far away from the point as the length will allow. There is bound to be a good deal of head-scratching and brain racking before a translation or even an abstract of the English is made. The publisher's font of type, the only one in New York, contains 12,700 characters of the Chinese characters, a dozen times as many as there are in the Chi Tau Mon, the great reading book, but they do not correspond exactly to those of the American editors and reporters. Proper names make the most trouble of all. When England had a change of premiers, for instance, the best the Herald could do was to announce that Pa-I-Fo, a member of the lesser Parliament, had taken the place of Sa-Wo.

The Chinese Weekly Herald, the only Chinese newspaper printed from movable type east of San Francisco, has issued about eighty numbers, and it has gained so much in the past year, both in influence and in circulation, that there is hardly a doubt of its permanence as one of the institutions of New York's Chinatown.

It is to be found just as regularly in Chinese laundries as the comic weeklies in an American barbershop. When the workman goes out of business, his success carries on the subscription. East of the Mississippi there is scarcely a village with a half-dozen Chinamen in its population which does not contain a subscriber. Addresses in Cuba, Colon, and even England are on the mailing-list. The out-of-town circulation, in fact, is greater than that in New York. None of its subscribers cannot read it, they merely buy the sheet and send it home in lieu of a weekly letter. It tells, they assume, all the American news they can possibly know, and costs only 2 cents—no why to go to the expense of hiring a professional letter writer.

men from Mock Tong village. The eyes of the white cow are coral or rubies. Because that cow can cure the prevailing disease, the capital of Sun Neng district displayed lanterns and decorated the streets with flowers and brilliant hangings. The people hire that white cow and lead her through all parts of the districts around the neighborhood of Canton. The owner of the cow is said to have obtained security for it of six thousand taels.

For securing loss the paper has one decided advantage. The editor, Lee Po Wong, a scholar of the first degree from the Imperial University at Peking, was elected last April as "Mayor of Chinatown" to serve for one year. When a Chinaman sees an American he must perform take the case into the regular civil courts. But when one Chinaman sees another, the general public settles nothing of the litigation. It is settled by Chinatown's Mayor at No. 16 Post street. It is used to be the custom to post up legal notices and decisions on bulletin boards in certain public places. Now, they are printed in the newspaper, which thus serves as a sort of official law journal. When a laundry is sold, for instance, the buyer deposits the purchase price in the Mayor's hands, and any person having a just claim against the laundry can get his money or property there. Notices of this sort of transaction are common. The Mayor has no means of enforcing his judgments but any person who fails to abide by his decision.

The advertising is not the least interesting feature of a sheet like this. Perhaps half of the "ads" are of American firms, and some of the familiar advertising pictures of the billboards look very strange in their setting. The name of the English name above each notice, apparently to convince the advertiser that he really got the space he paid for. Yet the letter-press headed "Pringle's Purple Pills" might in reality be an advertisement for the lotus flower for the eye. And right here is one of the sources of anxiety. His countrymen hold the editor responsible for the advertisements, not less than for the editorials. There is in the office an Indian letter from a subscriber who failed to receive any perceptible benefit from the prescribed number of doses of some sovereign remedy. Mr. Wong, of course, did not know anything about the medicine, and the best he could do was to arrange a meeting between the patent-medicine company's representative and the irate subscriber, with what result is not known, though the letter-writer was never heard from again.

Chinatown is a city in itself, and it would be easy to contrast its journal, featuring its own news, with the American papers. The comparison, after all, would show far more of similarity than of difference. It is the organ of 20,000 people in a foreign land. As the editor's salutatory said, you can't get any news "We are here as strangers among a race ignorant alike of our language, our manners, and our customs, and apt to make our virtues of ignorance and our vices of stupidity weapons to scourge us and exclude us from those civil rights which are accorded to the meanest and basest of their nationalities. We have been in the same predicament as the man who is deaf and dumb, for having eyes we could not hear and having tongues we could not speak."

Chicago Grain and Provision.—Chicago, Aug. 30.—Early trading in grains today was of the usual Saturday order, light business and mostly of an evening-up nature for the double holiday of Sunday and Monday. Conditions favored buying, cold weather still prevailing in the extreme northwest and showers having fallen over most of the spring harvest country during the night. September wheat started unchanged, to 1/2c, up to 7/8c, and after selling at 70c, closed back to 70c. The fact that this was the last day before beginning September deliveries was held to have no effect and the bugaboo of heavy short interests apparently had been dismissed. A drop of 8c. in two days in the Paris market had no effect. Other cables were insignificant, but some small buying in December, and that option, starting unchanged at 67 1/2c, sold to 67 1/2c. Local receipts were 227 cars, three of contract grade, Minneapolis 120, and other reported 107. Total for the three points of 334 cars, against 486 last week.
